PREFACE.

ABOVE forty-eight years have elapsed since Professor H. H. WILSON, then Assistant Surgeon in the service of the East India Company, published his translation of the Meghadúta, the first fruits of his literary labours in the mine of Sanskrit Literature. During the nineteen following years, while engaged in various official capacities, chiefly at Calcutta and Benares, and from the time of his return to England in 1832 till his death (on the 8th of May 1860) he continued to pursue his studies and researches on the literature, history, antiquities and religious systems of the Hindus with indefatigable industry. Ever zealously availing himself of the opportunities which were afforded him by his long residence in India and subsequently by his easy access to the rich stores of Manuscripts, accumulated both at the East India House and the Bodleian Library, for extending, deepening, and consolidating his investigations in Indian lore, he produced a large number of works of various extent, which for usefulness, depth of learning, and wide range of research show him to have been the worthy successor of Sir W. JONES and H. T. COLEBROOKE. The just appreciation of his merits, contained in the sketches of his life, character and labours, in the "Annual Report" of the R. Asiat. Soc. for 1860, and in the "Rapport" of the Société Asiatique for the same year, re-echoes but the meed of admiration and gratitude with which every student of Sanskrit acknowledges the obligations he owes to Professor WILSON's works. Many of these however, ranging as they do over a period of nearly half a century, were originally published in periodicals and transactions of oriental Societies not generally accessible, or have otherwise become scarce, while they still are the standard, and in some instances the only, authority on the various topics of which they treat. Every credit, therefore, is due to the publishers of the series of volumes, of which the present is the first instalment, for the spirit and zeal with which they formed, and at once took measures to carry out, the plan of reprinting a selection of his writings. Of the six divisions, in which these are to appear, the one containing Essays and Lectures on subjects connected with the religions of the Hindus was proposed to come out first, and at the publishers' request the undersigned undertook to carry it through the press. As it was found expedient to adhere in each division, as far as practicable, to the chronological order in which the several essays intended for it were originally published, the commencement was made with the celebrated “Sketch of the Religious Sects of the Hindus”, the first portion of which appeared in the Asiatic Researches for 1828, and the second (from p. 188 of the present edition) in the volume for 1832. The remaining eight Essays and Lectures selected for this division will form the second volume, which is in the press.

On account of the variety of manuscript sources in Persian, Sanskrit, Bengali and different dialects of Hindi, from which the author gleaned the materials for his “Sketch of the Religious Sects of the Hindus”, thorough consistency and uniformity in the transliteration of Indian names would have been beyond what could be expected by anyone ever so slightly acquainted with the various graphical, and still more phonetical, changes to which Sanskrit words are liable when passing into the vernacular idioms of modern India. No improvement in this respect was aimed at in the reprint of this work which appeared at Calcutta in the year 1846 (pp. 238 in 8^{vo}), and in which even the most obvious misprints of the original edition have been reproduced with scrupulous fidelity. Some care has, therefore, been bestowed in the present edition upon introducing such accuracy in the spelling of Indian words, both ancient and modern, as shall enable the student to trace without difficulty their original forms. In cases of slight, but unavoidable discrepancies, occasioned, it is feared, in not a few instances by the want of ready communication between the editor and the printer, the reader is referred to the Index. However desirable, too, it would have been to verify the many quotations contained in the Notes, this has been found practicable only so far as some access to the printed literature of India enabled the editor to trace them. With regard to those of them which he has failed to verify he must plead as his excuse that he undertook and carried on the work of editing with but little time to spare from his other avocations. The verifications which he has succeeded in tracing, and the references and few other additions he has thought necessary to make, are enclosed in brackets []; and he hopes that the volume, in the attractive garb, which publishers and printer have combined to give it, may not be the less welcome both to the student of Hindu literature and antiquities, and to everyone to whom the improvement of the religious condition of the Hindus is at heart.

A SKETCH OF THE RELIGIOUS SECTS OF THE HINDUS.

From the Asiatic Researches, Vols. XVI, Calc. 1828, p. 1-136, and XVII, Calc. 1832, p. 169-314.

INTRODUCTORY OBSERVATIONS.

THE Hindu religion is a term, that has been hitherto employed in a collective sense, to designate a faith and worship of an almost endlessly diversified description: to trace some of its varieties is the object of the present enquiry.

An early division of the Hindu system, and one conformable to the genius of all Polytheism, separated the practical and popular belief, from the speculative or philosophical doctrines. Whilst the common people addressed their hopes and fears to stocks and stones, and multiplied by their credulity and superstition the grotesque objects of their veneration, some few, of deeper thought and wider contemplation, plunged into the mysteries of man and nature, and endeavoured assiduously, if not successfully, to obtain just notions of the cause, the character and consequence of existence. This distinction prevails even in the Vedas, which have their Karma Kánda and Jnána Kánda, or Ritual and Theology.

The worship of the populace being addressed to different divinities, the followers of the several gods naturally separated into different associations, and the adorers of BRAHMÁ, VISHNU, and ŚIVA or other phantoms of their faith, became distinct and insulated bodies; in the general aggregate: the conflict of opinion on subjects, on which human reason has never yet agreed, led to similar differences in the philosophical class, and resolved itself into the several Darśanas, or schools of philosophy.

It may be supposed, that some time elapsed before the practical worship of any deity was more than a simple preference, or involved the assertion of the supremacy of the object of its adoration, to the degradation or exclusion of the other gods¹: in like manner also, the conflicting opinions were matters rather of curiosity than faith, and were neither regarded as subversive of each other, nor as incompatible with the public worship: and hence, notwithstanding the sources of difference that existed in the parts, the unity of the whole remained undisturbed: in this condition, indeed, the apparent mass of the

वैशाणां तु भवेद्रूपा शूद्राणां गणनाथः ॥ रति मनुः ॥

Brahmanical order at least, still continues: professing alike to recognise implicitly the authority of the Vedas, the worshippers of ŚIVA, or of VISHNU, and the maintainers of the Sánkhya or Nyáya doctrines, consider themselves, and even each other, as orthodox members of the Hindu community.

• To the internal incongruities of the system, which did not affect its integral existence, others were, in time, superadded, that threatened to dissolve or destroy the whole: of this nature was the exclusive adoration of the old deities, or of new forms of them; and even it may be presumed, the introduction of new divinities. In all these respects, the Puráñas and Tantras were especially instrumental, and they not only taught their followers to assert the unapproachable superiority of the gods they worshipped, but inspired them with feelings¹ of animosity towards those

पाषण्डनसे भवन्तु सच्चास्तपरिपन्थिः ॥

Those who profess the worship of BHAVA, (Śiva,) and those who follow their doctrines, are heretics and enemies of the sacred Sástras,—Again:

मुमुक्षुवो धोररूपान्हित्वा भूतपतीनय ।
नारायणकलाः शान्ता भजन्ति द्वृनसुयदः ॥

Those desirous of final emancipation, abandoning the hideous gods of the devils, pursue their devotions, calm, blameless, and being parts of NÁRÁYAÑA.

The Padma Purána is more personal towards VISHNU:

विष्णुदर्शनमाचेण शिवद्वीहः प्रवायते ॥
शिवद्वोहात्म सन्देहो नरके याति दाश्यम् । तस्मात् विष्णुगामा १५१ न वक्तव्यं कदाचन ॥

who presumed to dispute that supremacy: in this conflict the worship of BRAHMÁ has disappeared¹, as well as, indeed, that of the whole pantheon, except VISHNU, ŚIVA and ŚAKTI, or their modifications; with respect to the two former, in fact, the representatives have borne away the palm from the prototypes, and KRISHNA, RÁMA, or the Linga, are almost the only forms

From even looking at VISHNU, the wrath of ŚIVA is kindled, and from his wrath, we fall assuredly into a horrible hell; let not, therefore, the name of VISHNU ever be pronounced.

The same work is, however, cited by the VAISHNAVAS, for a very opposite doctrine.

वासुदेवं परिलक्ष्य योऽन्यदेवमुपासते ।
तृषितो जागृतीतरे कूपं खनति दुर्मतिः ॥

He who abandons VÁSUDEVA and worships any other god, is like the fool, who being thirsty, sinks a well in the bank of the Ganges.

The principle goes still further, and those who are inimical to the followers of a Deity, are stigmatised as his personal foes—thus in the Ādi Purāṇa, VISHNU says:

मङ्गलो वक्षभो चत्वं स एव मम वक्षमः ।
तत्परो वक्षभो नात्मि सत्यं सत्यं धनञ्जय ॥

He to whom my votary is a friend, is my friend—he who is opposed to him, is no friend of mine—be assured, Dhananjaya, of this.

¹ ŚIVA himself, in the form of KĀLA BHAIKAVA, tore off BRAHMÁ's fifth head, for presuming to say, that he was BRAHMĀ, the eternal and omnipotent cause of the world, and even the creator of ŚIVA, notwithstanding the four VEDAS and the personified Omkāra, had all given evidence, that this great, true and indescribable deity was ŚIVA himself. The whole story occurs in the Kāśi Khaṇḍ [c. 31] of the Skanda Purāṇa, and its real signification is sufficiently obvious.

under which VISHNU and SIVA are now adored in most parts of India¹.

The varieties of opinion kept pace with those of practice, and six heretical schools of philosophy disputed the pre-eminence with their orthodox brethren: we have little or no knowledge of these systems, and even their names are not satisfactorily stated: they seem, however, to be the Saugata or Baudha, Ār-hata, or Jaina, and Vārhaspatya, or Atheistical, with their several subdivisions².

Had the difference of doctrine taught in the heretical schools been confined to tenets of a merely speculative nature, they would, probably, have encountered little opposition, and excited little enmity among the Brah-

manical class, of which latitude of opinion is a very common characteristic. The founder of the Atheistical school, however, VÍRHASPATI, attacks both the Vedas and the Brahmans, and asserts that the whole of the Hindu system is a contrivance of the Priesthood, to secure a means of livelihood for themselves¹, whilst the Baudhas and Jainas, equally disregarding the Vedas and the Brahmans, the practice and opinions of the Hindus, invented a set of gods for themselves, and deposed the ancient pantheon: these aggressions provoked resentment: the writings of these sects are alluded to with every epithet of anger and contempt, and they are all anathematised as heretical and atheistical; more active measures than anathemas, it may be presumed, were had recourse to: the followers of

अभिहोरं चयो वेदास्त्रिदण्डं भस्मगुणम् ।
मुद्दिपौर्वयनानां जीविकेति वृहस्पतिः ॥

“The Agnihotra, the three Vedas, the Tridaṇḍa, the smearing of ashes, are only the livelihood of those who have neither intellect nor spirit.” After ridiculing the Śrāddha, shrewdly enough, he says:

ततस्य जीवणोपायो ब्राह्मणीर्विदितस्त्वह ।
मृतानां प्रेतकार्याणि न लन्वदिव्यते क्वचित् ॥

Hence it is evident, that it was a mere contrivance of the Brahmans to gain a livelihood, to ordain such ceremonies for the dead, and no other reason can be given for them. ‘Of the Vedas, he says: चयो वेदस्य कर्तारो भण्डधूर्तनिशाचराः ॥

The three Authors of the Vedas were Buffoons, Rogues, and Fiends—and cites texts in proof of this assertion.

VÍRHASPATI, having no worship at all, easily eluded the storm, but the Bauddhas of Hindustan were annihilated by its fury, and the Jainas apparently evaded it with difficulty, although they have undoubtedly survived its terrors, and may now defy its force.

The varieties thus arising from innovations in practice and belief, have differed, it may be concluded, at different eras of the Hindu worship. To trace the character of those which have latterly disappeared, or to investigate the remote history of some which still remain and are apparently of ancient date, are tasks for which we are far from being yet prepared: the enquiry is, in itself so vast, and so little progress has been made in the studies necessary to its elucidation, that it must yet remain in the obscurity in which it has hitherto been enveloped; so ambitious a project as that of piercing the impenetrable gloom has not instigated the present attempt, nor has it been proposed to undertake so arduous a labour, as the investigation and comparison of the abstruse notions of the philosophical sects¹. The humbler aim of these researches has been that of ascertaining the actual condition of the popular religion of the inhabitants of some of the provinces subject to the Bengal Government; and as a very great variety prevails in that religion, the subject may be considered as not devoid of curiosity and interest, especially as it has been left little better than a blank, in the voluminous compositions or compilations, professing to give an account of the native country of the Hindus.

The description of the different sects of the Hindus, which I propose to offer, is necessarily superficial: it would, indeed, have been impossible to have adopted the only unexceptionable method of acquiring an accurate knowledge of their tenets and observances, or of studying the numerous works in Sanskrit, Persian, or the provincial dialects of Hindi, on which they are founded. I have been obliged to content myself, therefore, with a cursory inspection of a few of those compositions, and to depend for much of my information on oral report, filling up or correcting from these two sources the errors and omissions of two works, on this subject professedly, from which I have derived the ground work of the whole account.

The works alluded to are in the Persian language, though both were written by Hindu authors; the first was compiled by SÍTAL SINH, Múnshí to the Rájá of Benares; the second by MATHURÁ NÁTH, late librarian of the Hindu College, at the same city, a man of great personal respectability and eminent acquirements: these works contain a short history of the origin of the various sects, and descriptions of the appearance, and observances, and present condition of their followers: they comprise all the known varieties, with one or two exceptions, and, indeed, at no one place in India could the enquiry be so well prosecuted as at Benares¹. The work of MATHURÁ NÁTH is the fullest and most satisfactory, though it leaves much to be desired, and much more than I have been able to supply. In addition to these sources of information, I have had frequent recourse to a work of great popularity and extensive circulation, which embodies the legendary history of all the most celebrated Bhaktas or devotees of the Vaishnava order. This work is entitled the Bhakta Málá. The original, in a difficult dialect of Hindi, was composed by NÁBHÁJI, about 250 years ago², and is little more than a catalogue, with brief and obscure references to some leading circumstances connected with the life of each individual, and from the inexplicit nature of its allusions, as well as the difficulty of its style, is far from intelligible to the generality even of the natives. The work, in its present form, has received some modifications, and obvious additions from a later teacher, NÁRÁYAÑ DÁS, whose share in the composition is, no doubt,

श्रुतिशृतिविहीनान् ये श्रीचाचारविवर्जिताः ।
येषां क्वापि गतिर्नास्ति तेषां वाराणसी गतिः ॥

• “To those who are strangers to the Śruti and Smṛiti (Religion and Law); to those who have never known the observance of pure and indispensable rites; to those who have no other place to repair to; to those, is Benares an asylum.” [Compare Prabodhach. ed. Brockhaus, p. 19.]

considerable, but cannot be discriminated from NÁ-BHÁJÍ's own, beyond the evidence furnished by the specification of persons unquestionably subsequent to his time.—NÁRÁYÁN DÁS probably wrote in the reign of SHÁH JEHÁN. The brevity and obscurity of the original work pervade the additional matter, and to remedy these defects, the original text, or Múla, has been taken as a guide for an amplified notice of its subjects, or the Tíká of KRÍSHNÁ DÁS; and the work, as usually met with, always consists of these two divisions. The Tíká is dated Samvat, 1769 or A. D. 1713. Besides these, a translation of the Tíká, or a version of it in the more ordinary dialect of Hindustan, has been made by an anonymous author, and a copy of this work, as well as of the original, has furnished me with materials for the following account. The character of the Bhakta Málá will best appear from the extracts of translations from it to be hereafter introduced: it may be sufficient here to observe, that it is much less of a historical than legendary description, and that the legends are generally insipid and extravagant: such as it is, however, it exercises a powerful influence, in Upper India, on popular belief, and holds a similar place in the superstitions of this country, as that which was occupied in the darkest ages of the Roman Catholic faith, by the Golden Legend and Acts of the Saints¹.

SECTION II.

STATE OF THE HINDU RELIGION, ANTERIOR TO ITS PRESENT CONDITION.

Although I have neither the purpose nor the power to enter into any detail of the remote condition of the feelings on this subject, we may appeal to the Padma Purāna. In the Uttara Khaṇḍa, or last portion of this work, towards the end of it, several sections are occupied with a dialogue between ŚIVA and PĀRVATI, in which the former teaches the latter the leading principles of the Vaishiava faith. Two short sections are devoted to the explanation of who are heretics, and which are the heretical works. All are Pāshandas, ŚIVA says, who adore other gods than VISHNU, or who hold, that other deities are his equals, and all Brahmins who are not Vaishnavas, are not to be looked at, touched, nor spoken to:—

ये अन्यं देवं परस्वेन वदन्यज्ञानमोहिताः ।
नारायणाज्ञगज्ञाधात्मे वै पाषण्डिनः सूताः ॥ २
यसु नारायणं देवं ब्रह्मदादिदेवतैः ॥
सममन्वितरीचित स पाषण्डो भवेत्सदा ॥
किमच बङ्गोत्तेन त्राप्त्वा ये द्यवैष्णवाः ।
न स्पष्टव्या न वक्तव्या न द्रष्टव्याः कदाचन ॥

ŚIVA, in acknowledging that the distinguishing marks of his votaries, the skull, tiger's skin, and ashes, are reprobated by the Vedas (Śrutiigarhitam) states, that he was directed by VISHNU to inculcate their adoption, purposely to lead those who assumed them into error.—NAMUCHII and other Daityas had become so powerful by the purity of their devotions, that INDRA and the other gods were unable to oppose them. The gods had recourse to VISHNU, who, in consequence, ordered ŚIVA to introduce the Śaiva tenets and practices, by which the Daityas were beguiled, and rendered “wicked, and thence weak.”

In order to assist ŚIVA in this work, ten great Sages were imbued with the Tdmasa property, or property of darkness and Hindu faith, yet as its present state is of comparatively very recent origin, it may form a not unnecessary, nor ignorance, and by them such writings were put forth as were calculated to disseminate unrighteous and heretical doctrines, these were KAÑÁDA, GAUTAMA, ŠAKTI, UPAMANYU, JAIMINI, KAPILA, DURVÁSAS, MÍKRAÑDA, VÍRHASPATI, and BHÁRGAVA.

By ŠIVA himself, the Páśupata writings were composed; KAÑÁDA is the author of the Vaiśeṣika Philosophy. The Nyáya originates with GAUTAMA. KAPILA, is the founder of the Sánkhya School, and VÍRHASPATI of the Chárváka. JAIMINI, by ŠIVA's orders, composed the Mimánsá, which is heretical, in as far as it inculcates works in preference to faith, and ŠIVA himself, in the disguise of a Brahman, or as VYÁSA, promulgated the Védánta, which is heterodox in Vaishnava estimation, by denying the sensible attributes of the deity. VISHNU, as BUDDHA, taught the Bauddha Śástra, and the practices of going naked, or wearing blue garments, meaning, consequently, not the Bauddhas, but the Jainas, (बौद्धशास्त्रमस्त्रोतं नपरीलपटादिकं). The Puráṇas were partly instrumental in this business of blinding mankind, and they are thus distinguished by our authority and all the Vaishnava works.

The Mátsya, Kaurma, Lainga, Śaiva, Skánda and Agneya, are Támasa, or the works of darkness, having more or less of a Śaiva bias.

The Vishnu, Náraṇiya, Bhágavat, Gáruḍa, Pádma and Váráhá, are Sáttvika, pure and true; being in fact, Vaishnava text books.

The Brahmánda, Brahma Vaivartta, Márkaṇdeya, Bhavishya, Vámana and Brahmá, are of the Rájasa cast, emanating from the quality of passion. As far as I am acquainted with them, they lean to the Śikta division of the Hindus, or the worship of the female principle. The Márkaṇdeya does so notoriously, containing the famous Chándi Pátha, or Durgá Máhátmya, which is read at the Durgá Pújá; the Brahma Vaivartta, is especially dedicated to KRÍSHNA as GOVINDA, and is principally occupied by him and his mistress RÁDHÁ. It is also full on the subject of Prakriti or personified nature.

uninteresting preliminary branch of the enquiry, to endeavour to determine its existing modifications, at the period immediately preceding the few centuries, which have sufficed to bestow upon it its actual form:

A similar distinction is made even with the Smritis, or works on law. The codes of VASISHTHA, HÁRITA, VYÁSA, PARÁSARA, BHARADWÁJA and KAŚYAPA, are of the pure order. Those of YÁJNAVALKYA, ATRI, TITTIRI, DAKSHA, KÁTYÁYANA and VISHNU of the Rájasa class, and those of GAUTAMA, VÍRUPASPATI, SAM-VARTTA, YAMA, ŚANKHA and UŚANAS, are of the Támasa order.

The study of the Puráṇas and Smritis of the Sáttwika class, secures Mukti, or final emancipation, that of those of the Rájasa obtains Swarga, or Paradise; whilst that of the Támasa condemns a person to hell, and a wise man will avoid them.

किमत्र बङ्गनोत्तेन पुराणेषु स्मृतिष्वपि ।
तामसा न रक्षयेत् वर्जयेत्तान्विच्चरणः ॥

The Vaishnava writers endeavour to enlist the Vedas in their cause, and the following texts are quoted by the Tátparya Nirṇaya:

एको नारायण आसीन्न ब्रह्मा न च शंकरः ।
NÁRÁYANA alone was, not BRAHMÁ nor ŚANKARA.

वासुदेवो वा इदमय आसीन्न ब्रह्मा न च शंकरः ।
Or VÁSUDEVA was before this (universe,) not BRAHMÁ nor ŚANKARA.

The Śaivas cite the Vedas too, as सर्वव्यापी स भगवांस्तस्मात्सर्वगतः शिवः ॥

The Lord who pervades all things, is thence termed the omnipresent Siva.

Rudra is but one, and has no second—

एको ऽपि रुद्रो न द्वितीयः ॥

These citations would scarcely have been made, if not authentic; they probably do occur in the Vedas, but the terms Náráyana and Vásudeva, or Siva and Rudra, are not to be taken in the restricted sense, probably, which their respective followers would assign them.

it happens, also, that some controversial works exist, which throw considerable light upon the subject, and of which the proximity of their date, to the matters of which they treat, may be conjectured with probability or positively ascertained. Of these, the two principal works, and from which I shall derive such scanty information as is attainable, are the Sankara Digvijaya of ÁNANDA GIRI, and the Sarva Darśana Sangraha of MÁDHAVÁCHÁRYA, the former a reputed disciple of SANKARA himself, and the latter a well known and able writer, who lived in the commencement of the 14th century.

The authenticity of the latter of these two works, there is no room to question; and there is but little reason to attach any doubt to the former. Some of the marvels it records of SANKARA, which the author professes to have seen, may be thought to affect its credibility, if not its authenticity, and either ÁNANDA GIRI must be an unblushing liar, or the book is not his own: it is, however, of little consequence, as even, if the work be not that of ÁNANDA GIRI himself, it bears internal and indisputable evidence of being the composition of a period, not far removed from that at which he may be supposed to have flourished, and we may, therefore, follow it as a very safe guide, in our enquiries into the actual state of the Hindu Religion about eight or nine centuries ago.

The various sectaries of the Hindu Religion then existing, are all introduced to be combated, and, of course, conquered, by SANKARA: the list is rather a long one, but it will be necessary to go through the whole, to ascertain the character of the national faith of those days, and its present modifications, noticing, as we proceed, some of the points of difference or resemblance between the forms of worship which then prevailed, and which now exist. The two great divisions of Vaishn̄avas and Śaivas were both in a flourishing condition, and each embraced six principal subdivisions: we shall begin with the former, who are termed; Bhaktas, Bhágavatas, Vaishn̄avas, Chakriñas, or Panchardátrakas, Vaikhánasas and Karmahínas.

But as each of these was subdivided into a practical and speculative, or Karma and Jnána portion, they formed, in fact, twelve classes of the followers of VISHNU, as the sole and supreme deity.

The Bhaktas worshipped VISHNU as VÁSUDEYA, and wore no characteristic marks. The Bhágavatas worshipped the same deity as BHÁGAVAT, and impressed upon their persons the usual Vaishn̄ava insignia, representing the discus, club, &c. of that divinity; they likewise revered the Sálagrám stone, and Tulasi plant, and in several of their doctrinal notions, as well as in these respects, approach to the present followers of RÁMÁNUJA, although they cannot be regarded as exactly the same. The authorities of these three sects were the Upanishads and Bhagavad Gítá. The names of both the sects still remain, but they are scarcely applicable to any particular class of Vaishn̄avas: the terms Bhakta, or Bhagat, usually indicate any individual who pretends to a more rigid devotion than his neighbours, and who especially occupies his mind with spiritual considerations: the Bhágavat is one who follows particularly the authority of the Śrī Bhágavat Puráńa.

The Vaishńavas adored VISHNU as NÁRÁYAÑA, they wore the usual marks, and promised themselves a sort of sensual paradise after death, in Vaikuńtha, or VISHNU's heaven; their tenets are still current, but they can scarcely be considered to belong to any separate sect.

The Chakrińas, or Pancharátrikas were, in fact, Śáktas of the Vaishńava class, worshipping the female personifications of VISHNU, and observing the ritual of the Pancharátra Tantra: they still remain, but scarcely individualised, being confounded with the worshippers of KRISHNA and RÁMA on the one hand, and those of Śakti or Devi on the other.

The Vaikhánasas appear to have been but little different from the Vaishńavas especially so called; at least ÁNANDA GIRI has not particularised the difference; they worshipped NÁRÁYAÑA as supreme god, and wore his marks. The Karmahínas abstained, as the name implies, from all ritual observances, and professed to know Vishnu as the sole source and sum of the universe, सर्वे विष्णुमयं जगत्; they can scarcely be considered as an existent sect, though a few individuals of the Rámánujiya and Rámánandí Vaishńavas may profess the leading doctrines.

The Vaishńava forms of the Hindu faith are still, as we shall hereafter see, sufficiently numerous; but we can scarcely identify any one of them with those which seem to have prevailed when the Sankara Vijaya of ÁNANDA GIRI was composed. The great divisions, of RÁMÁNUJA and RÁMÁNAND—the former of which originated, we know, in the course of the 11th century, are unnoticed, and it is also worth while to observe, that neither in this, nor in any other portion of the Sankara Vijaya, is any allusion made to the separate worship of KRÍSHNA, either in his own person, or that of the infantine forms in which he is now so pre-eminently venerated in many parts of India, nor are the names of RÁMA and SÍTÁ, of LAKSHMAÑA or HANUMÁN, once particularised, as enjoying any portion of distinct and specific adoration.

The Śaiva sects are the Śaivas, Raudras, Ugras, Bháktas, Jangamas, and Pásupatas. Their tenets are so blended in the discussion, that it is not possible to separate them, beyond the conjectural discrimination which may be derived from their appellations: the text specifies merely their characteristic marks: thus the Śaivas wore the impression of the Linga on both arms; the Raudras had a Tríśúla, or trident, stamped on the forehead; the Ugras had the Íamaru, or drum of Śiva on their arms, and the Bháktas an impression of the Linga on the forehead—the Jangamas carried a figure of the Linga on the head, and the Pásupatas imprinted the same object on the forehead, breast, navel, and arms. Of these sects, the Śaivas are not now any one particular class—nor are the Raudras, Ugras, or Bháktas, any longer distinct societies: the Jengamas remain, but they are chiefly confined to the south of India, and although a Páśupata, or worshipper of ŚIVA as PĀŚUPATI, may be occasionally encountered, yet this has merged into other sects, and particularly into that of the Kānphátú Jogis: the authorities cited by these sects, according to ÁNANDA GIRI, were the Siva Gítá, Siva Śanhátá, Siva Ráhasya and Rudra Yámala Tantra: the various classes of Jogis are never alluded to, and the work asserts, what is generally admitted as a fact, that the Dañdís, and Daśnámí Gosainis originated with ŚANKARA ÁCHÁRYA.

Worshippers of BRAHMÁ, or HIRÁÑYAGARBHA, are also introduced by ÁNANDA GIRI, whom now it might be difficult to meet with: exclusive adorers of this deity, and temples dedicated to him, do not now occur perhaps in any part of India; at the same time it is an error to suppose that public homage is never paid to him. BRAHMÁ is particularly reverence at Pokher in Ajmír, also at Bithúr, in the Doab, where, at the principal Ghát, denominated Brahmávartta Ghát, he is said to have offered an Aśwamedha on completing the act of creation: the pin of his slipper left behind him on the occasion, and now fixed in one of the steps of the Ghát, is still worshipped there, and on the full moon of Agraháyana (Nov.-Dec.) a very numerously attended Melá, or meeting, that mixes piety with profit, is annually held at that place.

The worshippers of AGNI no longer form a distinct class, a few Agnihotra Brahmans, who preserve the family fire, may be met with, but in all other respects they conform to some mode of popular devotion.

The next opponents of SANKARA ĀCHARYA were the Sauras, or worshippers of the sun, as the creator and cause of the world: a few Sauras, chiefly Brahmans, still exist as a sect, as will be hereafter noticed; but the divisions enumerated by ĀNANDA GĪRĪ, are now, it is believed, unknown: he distinguishes them into the following six classes.

Those who adored the rising sun, regarding it as especially the type of BRAHMĀ, or the creative power. Those who worshipped the meridian sun as IŚWĀRA, the destructive and regenerative faculty; and those who reverenced the setting sun, as the prototype of VIŚHNU, or the attribute of preservation.

The fourth class comprehended the advocates of the Trimūrti, who addressed their devotions to the sun in all the preceding states, as the comprehensive type of these three divine attributes.

The object of the fifth form is not quite clearly stated, but it appears to have been the adoration of the sun as a positive and material body, and the marks on his surface, as his hair, beard, &c. The members of this class so far correspond with the Sauras of the present day, as to refrain from food until they had seen the sun.

The sixth class of Sauras, in opposition to the preceding, deemed it unnecessary to address their devotions to the visible and material sun: they provided a mental luminary, on which they meditated, and to which their adoration was offered: they stamped circular orbs on their foreheads, arms, and breasts with hot irons; a practice uniformly condemned by ŚĀNKARA, as contrary to the laws of the Vedas, and the respect due to Brahmanical flesh and blood.

GAÑEŚA, as well as SŪRYA, had formerly six classes of adorers; in the present day he cannot boast of any exclusive worship, although he shares a sort of homage with almost all the other divinities: his followers were the worshippers of MAHĀ GAÑAPATI, of HARIDRA GAÑAPATI, or DHŪNDÍ RĀJ, who is still a popular form of GAÑEŚA, of UCHCHHISHTHA G., of NAVANĪTA G., of SWARĀGA G., and of SANTĀNA G. The left hand sub-division of the UCHCHHISHTHA GAÑAPATI sect, also called Hairamba, abrogated all obligatory ritual and distinction of caste.

The adorers of the female personifications of divine power, appear to have been fully as numerous as at present, and to have worshipped the same objects, or BHAVĀNĪ, MAHĀ LAKSHMĪ, and SARASWATĪ: even as personifications of these divinities, however, the worship of SÍTĀ and RĀDHĀ, either singly, or in conjunction with RĀMA and KRISHNA, never makes its appearance. The worshippers of Śakti were then, as now, divided into two classes, a right and left hand order, and three sub-divisions of the latter are enumerated, who are still well known—the Pírnábhishiktas, Akrítárthas, Kritákṛityasamas.

There can be little doubt, that the course of time and the presence of foreign rulers, have very much ameliorated the character of much of the Hindu worship : if the licentious practices of the ŚĀKTAS are still as prevalent as ever, which may well be questioned, they are, at least, carefully concealed from observation, and if they are not exploded, there are other observances of a more ferocious description, which seem to have disappeared. The worship of BHAIRAVA still prevails amongst the Śāktas and the Jogis; but in upper India, at least, the naked mendicant, smeared with funeral ashes, armed with a trident or a sword, carrying a hollow skull in his hand, and half intoxicated with the spirits which he has quaffed from that disgusting wine-cup, prepared, in short, to perpetrate any act of violence and crime, the Kápálika of former days, is now rarely, if ever, encountered. In the work of ĀNANDA GIRI, we have two of these sectaries introduced, one a Brahman by birth, is the genuine Kápálika: he drinks wine, eats flesh, and abandons all rites and observances in the spirit of his faith, his eminence in which has armed him with supernatural powers, and rendered BHAIRAVA himself the reluctant, but helpless minister of his will. The other Kápálika is an impostor, the son of a harlot, by a gatherer of Táḍi, or Palm juice, and who has adopted the character as an excuse for throwing off all social and moral restraint. The Kápálikas are often alluded to in controversial works, that appear to be the compositions of a period at least preceding the tenth century¹.

The next classes of sectaries, confuted by SANKARA, were various infidel sects, some of whom avowedly, and perhaps all covertly, are still in being: the list is also interesting, as discriminating opinions which, in the ignorance subsequent to their disappearance from Hindustan, have very commonly been, and, indeed, still are frequently confounded. These are the Chár-vákas, or Śúnya Vádis, the Saugatas, the Kshapańakas, the Jainas, and the Bauddhas.

The Chárvakas were so named from one of their teachers, the MUNI CHÁRVÁKA. From VÍRHASPATI—some of whose dogmas have been quoted from the work of MÁDHAVA, they are termed also Várhspatyaś. The appellation Śúnya Vádi implies the asserter of the unreality and emptiness of the universe, and another designation, Lokáyata, expresses their adoption of the tenet, that this being is the Be-all of existence: they were, in short, the advocates of materialism and atheism, and have existed from a very remote period, and still exist, as we shall hereafter see.

The Saugatas are identified even by MÁDHAVA with Bauddhas, but there seems to have been some, although probably not any very essential difference: the chief tenet of this class, according to ÁNANDA GIRI, was their adopting the doctrine taught by SUGATA MUNI, that tenderness towards animated nature comprehends all moral and devotional duty, a tenet which is, in a great measure, common to both the Bauddha and Jaina schisms: it is to be feared, that the personal description of the Saugata, as a man of a fat body and small head, although possibly intended to characterise the genus, will not direct us to the discovery of its origin or history. The Kshapañaka again has always been described by Hindu writers as a Buddha, or sometimes even a Jaina naked mendicant: in the work before us he appears as the professor of a sort of astrological religion, in which¹ time is the principal divinity, and he is described as carrying, in either hand, the implements of his science, or a Gola Yantra, and Túrya Yantra, the former of which is an armillary sphere, and the latter a kind of quadrant, apparently for ascertaining time²; from the geographical controversy that occurs between him and ŚANKARA, it appears that he entertains the doctrine regarding the descent of earth in space, which is attributed by the old astronomers to the Buddhas, and controverted by the author of the *Surya Siddhánta*³, and subsequently by BHÁSKARA: the former is quoted by ŚANKARA, according to our author. These doctrines, the commentators on BHÁSKARA's work, and even he, himself, commenting on his own text, say, belong to the Jainas, not to the Bauddhas; but, possibly, the correction is itself an error, it does not appear that the Kshapaniaka of ÁNANDA GIRI argues the existence of a double set of planetary bodies, which is, undoubtedly, a Jaina doctrine¹, and the descent of the earth in space may have been common to all these sects.

The Jainas that existed in the time of ÁNANDA GIRI appear as Digambaras only; he does not notice their division into Digambaras and Swetámbaras, as they at present are found, and existed indeed prior to the age of MÁDHAVA. The Bauddhas are introduced personally, although it may be questioned whether they were very numerous in India in so comparatively modern a period: according to ÁNANDA GIRI, a persecution of this sect, and of the Jainas, took place in one part of the peninsula, the state of Rudrapur, during ŚANKARA's life time, but he, as well as MÁDHAVA², excludes ŚANKARA from being at all concerned in it. He ascribes its occurrence to the same source, the instigation of a Bhāṭṭa, from the north, or, in fact, of KUMÁRILA BHAṬṬĀ, a Bengāli, or Maithili Brahman.

A long series of sectaries then ensues, of a more orthodox description, and who only err in claiming primeval and pre-eminent honors for the objects of their adoration—none of these are to be found; and, although, of a certain extent, the places of some of them may be supplied by the local deities of the villagers, and by the admission of others to a participation in the worship paid to the presiding deities of each sect, yet there can be little doubt, that a large portion of the Hindu Pantheon formerly enjoyed honours, which have for some centuries past been withheld. In this predicament are INDRA, KUVERA, YAMA, VARUÑA, GÁRUÐA, ŚEŠHA, and SOMA, all of whom, in the golden age of Hindu idolatry, had, no doubt, temples and adorers: the light and attractive service of the god of love, indeed, appears to have been formerly very popular, as his temples and groves make a distinguished figure in the¹ tales, poems, and dramas of antiquity: it is a feature that singularly characterises the present state of the Hindu religion, that if in some instances it is less ferocious, in others it has ceased to address itself to the amiable propensities of the human character, or the spontaneous and comparatively innocent feelings of youthful natures. The buffoonery of the Holi, and barbarity of the Charak Pújá, but ill express the sympathies which man, in all countries, feels with the vernal season, and which formerly gave rise to the festive Vasantotsava of the Hindus, and the licentious homage paid to Sakti and BHAIRAVA, has little in common with the worship, that might be supposed acceptable to KÁMA and his lovely bride, and which it would appear they formerly enjoyed.

Besides the adorers of the secondary divinities, we have a variety of sects who direct their devotions to beings of a still lower rank, and of whom none, at present, exist as distinct bodies, although individuals may be found, either detached or comprehended in other classes, who, more or less, reverence similar objects. Thus, the worship of *Akás*¹, or Ether, as the supreme deity, is still occasionally met with: all classes pay daily homage to the Pitr'is or Manes, and a few of the Tántrikas worship the Siddhas, or Genii, in the hope of acquiring super-human powers: the same class furnishes occasional votaries of the Vasus, Yakshas, and Gandharvas, and even of the Vetálas and Rhútas, or goblins and ghosts, and the latter also receive still, from the fears of the villagers, propitiatory adoration. It does not appear, that in any form, the worship of the moon and stars, of the elements, and divisions of the universe, is still practised, although that of the Tirthas, or holy places and rivers, is as popular as ever.

We have thus completed the enumeration of the sects as described by the author of the Sankara Vijaya, and have had an opportunity of observing, that, although the outlines of the system remain the same, the details have undergone very important alterations, since the time at which this work was composed: the rise of most of the existing modifications, we can trace satisfactorily enough, as will hereafter appear, and it is not improbable, that the disappearance of many of those, which no longer take a part in the idolatry of the Hindus, may be attributed to the exertions of ŚANKARA and his disciples: his object, as appears from the work we have hitherto followed, was by no means the suppression of acts of outward devotion, nor of the preferential worship of any acknowledged and pre-eminent deity: his leading tenet is the recognition of *Brahma Para Brahma*¹, as the sole cause and supreme ruler of the universe, and as distinct from ŚIVA, VISHNU, BRAHMĀ, or any individual member of the pantheon: with this admission, and in regard to the weakness of those human faculties, which cannot elevate themselves to the conception of the inscrutable first cause, the observance of such rites, and the worship of such deities, as are either prescribed by the Vedas, or the works not incompatible with their authority, were left undisturbed by this teacher²; they even received, to a certain extent, his particular sanction, and the following divisions of the Hindu faith were, by his express permission, taught by some of his disciples, and are, consequently, regarded by the learned Brahmans in general, as the only orthodox and allowable forms in the present day¹. The Śaiva faith was instituted by PARAMATA KÁLÁNALA, who is described as teaching at Benares, and assuming the insignia that characterise the Daṇḍis of modern times. The Vaishṇava worship was taught at Kánchi, or Conjeveram, by LAKSHMAÑA ÁCHÁRYA and HASTÁMALAKA; and the latter seems to have introduced a modified adoration of VISHNU, in the character of KRISHNA. The Saura sect was continued under the auspices of DIVÁKARA, Brahmachári, and the Śákta, under those of the Sannyási, TRIPURA-KUMÁRA: the Gánapatya were allowed to remain under the presidency of GIRIJAPUTRA, and from such persons as had not adopted either of the preceding systems, BATUKÁNÁTH, the professor of the Kápálika, or Bhairava worship, was permitted to attract followers: all these teachers were converts and disciples of ŚANKARA,

In the present impure age, the bud of wisdom being blighted by iniquity, men are inadequate to the apprehension of pure unity; they will be apt, therefore, again to follow the dictates of their own fancies, and it is necessary for the preservation of the world, and the maintenance of civil and religious distinctions, to acknowledge those modifications of the divine spirit which are the work of the SUPREME. These reflexions having occurred to ŚANKARA, he addressed his disciple, &c.

The notice that occurs in the Sarva Darśana of any of the sects which have yet been mentioned, has been already incidentally adverted to: this work is less of a popular form than the preceding, and controverts the speculative rather than the practical doctrines of other schools: besides the atheistical Bauddha and Jaina sects, the work is occupied chiefly with the refutation of the followers of Jaimini, Gautama, and Patanjali, and we have no classes of worshippers introduced but those of the *Vaishnava*s who follow RÁMÁNUJA, and Mađhwáchárya, of the *Śaiva*s, the Páśupatas, the followers of ABHINAVA GUPTA, who taught the Mantra worship of Śiva; and the alchemical school, or worshippers of ŚIVA's type in quicksilver, and the Rasendra Linga: most of these seem to have sprung into being in the interval between the 10th and 13th centuries, and have now either disappeared, or are rapidly on the decline: those which actually exist, we shall recur to in the view we are now prepared to take of the actual condition of the Hindu faith.

SECTION III.

PRESENT DIVISIONS OF THE HINDUS, AND OF THE VAISHNAVAS IN PARTICULAR.

The classification adopted by the works, I especially follow, if not unexceptionable, is allowable and convenient, and may, therefore, regulate the following details: it divides all the Hindus into three great classes, or Vaishnavas, Śaivas, and Śaktas, and refers to a fourth or miscellaneous class, all not comprised in the three others. 4333

The worshippers of Viṣṇu, Śiva, and Śakti, who are the objects of the following description, are not to be confounded with the orthodox adorers of those divinities: few Brahmans of learning, if they have any religion at all, will acknowledge themselves to belong to any of the popular divisions of the Hindu faith, although, as a matter of simple preference, they more especially worship some individual deity, as their chosen, or Ishta Devatā: they refer also to the Vedas, the books of law, the Puráṇas, and Tantras, as the only ritual they recognise, and regard all practices not derived from those sources as irregular and profane: on the other hand, many of the sects seem to have originated, in a great measure, out of opposition to the Brahmanical order: teachers and disciples are chosen from any class, and the distinction of caste is, in a great measure, sunk in the new one, of similarity of schism: the ascetics and mendicants, also in many instances, affect to treat the Brahmans with particular contempt, and this is generally repaid with interest by the Brahmans. A portion, though not a large one, of the populace is still attached to the Smárta Brahmans, as their spiritual guides, and are so far distinct from any of the sects we shall have to specify, whilst most of the followers, even of the sects, pay the ordinary deference to the Brahmanical order, and especially evince towards the Brahmans of their own fellowship, of whom there is generally abundance, the devotedness and submission which the original Hindu Code so perpetually inculcates.

Excluding, therefore, those who may be regarded as the regular worshippers of regular gods, we have the following enumeration of the several species of each class :

VAISHNAVAS.

- 1 Rámánujas, or Śrī Sampradáyis, or Śrī Vaishnávas.
- 2 Rámánandís, or Rámávats.
- 3 Kabír Panthís.
- 4 Khákís.
- 5 Malúk Dásís.
- 6 Dádú Panthís.
- 7 Ráya Dásís.
- 8 Senáís.
- 9 Vallabháchárís, or Rudra Sampradáyis.
- 10 Mírá Báís.
- 11 Mađhwáchárís, or Brahma Sampradáyis.
- 12 Nímávats, or Sanakádi Sampradáyis.
- 13 The Vaishnávas of Bengal.

- 14 Rádhá Vallabhís.
- 15 The Sakhí Bhávas.
- 16 Charań Dásís.
- 17 Hariśchandís.
- 18 Sadhná Panthís.
- 19 Mádhavís.
- 20 Sannyásís; Vairágís and Nágas.

ŚAIVAS.

- 1 Dańdís and Daśnámís.
- 2 Jogís.
- 3 Jangamas.
- 4 Paramahaṇasas.
- 5 Úrdhabáhús, Ákás Mukhís, and Nakhís.
- 6 Gúdaras.
- 7 Rúkharas, Súkharas and Úkharas.
- 8 Kańá Lingís.
- 9 Sannyásís, &c.

ŚÁKTAS.

- 1 Dakshińís.
- 2 Vámís.
- 3 Káñcheliyas.
- 4 Karárís.

MISCELLANEOUS SECTS.

- 1 Gáhapatyas.
- 2 Saurapatas.
- 3 Nának Sháhís of seven classes.
 - 1 Udásís.
 - 2 Ganjbakhshís.
 - 3 Rámráyís.
 - 4 Suthrá Sháhís.

- 5 Govind Sinhís.
- 6 Nirmalas.
- 7 Nágas.
- 4 Jainas of two principal orders.
 - 1 Digambaras.
 - 2 Śvetámbaras.
- 5 Bábá Lálís.
- 6 Prán Náthís.
- 7 Sádhs.
- 8 Śatnámís.
- 9 Śiva Náráyańís.
- 10 Śúnyavádís.

These will be regarded as varieties enough, it may be presumed, especially when it is considered, that most of them comprise a number of sub-divisions, and that besides these acknowledged classifications, many individual mendicants are to be found all over India, who can scarcely be included within the limits of any of them, exercising a sort of independence both in thought and act, and attached very loosely, if at all, to any of the popular schismatical sects¹.

“HARI, in preceding ages, assumed twenty-four principal shapes, but four were manifest in the Kali Jug: the magnanimous Rámánuja, a treasure of Ambrosia and terrestrial tree of plenty: the ocean of kindness and transporter across the sea of the universe, Vishnu Swámi: Madhu Áchárj, a rich cloud in the autumnal season of piety: and Nimbáditya, a sun that illumined the eave of ignorance; by them acts of piety and obligation were divided, and each sect was severally established.” There are also Sanskrit texts authorising the different institution, and characteristic term of each Sampradáya, one of these is from the Padma Purána:

अतः कली भविष्यन्ति चत्वारः सम्प्रदायिनः ॥

“Those Mantras, which belong to no system, are of no virtue; and, therefore, in the Kali age, there shall be followers of four sects. Śrī, Mádhvi, Rudra and Sanaka, shall be the Vaishnávas, purifying the world, and these four, Dévi, (Śiva speaks,) shall be the institutors of the Sampradáyas in the Kali period.” We may here observe in passing, that if this text is genuine, the Padma Purána must be very modern: another similar text is the following:

cient and respectable is the Śrī Sampradáya, founded by the Vaishnava reformer Rámánuja Achárya, about the middle of the twelfth century¹.

The history of RÁMÁNUJA, and his first followers, is well known in the south of India, of which he was a native, and is recorded in various legendary tracts and traditional narratives.

According to the Bhárgava Upapurána, RÁMÁNUJA is said to have been an incarnation of the serpent Śesha, whilst his chief companions and disciples were the embodied Discus, Mace, Lotus, and other insignia of Vishnú. In a Kanara account of his life, called the Divya Charitra, he is said to have been the son of “LAKSHMÍ selected Rámánuja; BRAHMA Madhwáchárya; Rudra gave the preference to Vishnú Swámi, and the four Saṅkas to Nimbáditya.” The cause of the election is not very evident, as the creeds taught by those teachers, have little connexion with the deity who lends the appellation to the sects.

¹ The Smíti Kála Taranga places the date of RÁMÁNUJA’s appearance in Śaka—1049 or A. D. 1127. A note by Colonel Mackenzie on an inscription, given in the Asiatic Researches 9, 270, places the birth of RÁMÁNUJA in A. D. 1008: various accounts, collected by Dr. Buchanan, make it 1010 and 1025 (Buchanan’s Mysore 2, 80) and 1019 (ibid. 3, 413). Inscriptions make him alive in 1128, (ibid.) which would give him a life of more than a century: according to COL. WILKS, indeed (History of Mysore 1, 41, note and appendix), he was alive in 1183. The weight of authority seems to be in favour of the more recent date, and we may conclude that he was born about the end of the eleventh century, and that the first half of the twelfth century was the period at which his fame, as a teacher, was established.

Śri Keśava Achārya and Bhūmi Devī; and, as before, an incarnation of Śesha. He was born at Perumbur, and studied at Kānchi, or Conjeveram, where also he taught his system of the Vaishnava faith. He afterwards resided at Śri Ranga, worshipping Vishnū as Śri Ranga Nātha, and there composed his principal works, he then visited various parts of India, disputing with the professors of different creeds, overcoming them of course, and reclaiming various shrines, then in possession of the Śaivas, for the worshippers of Vishnū, particularly the celebrated temple of Tripeti.

On his return to Śri Ranga, the disputes between the Vaishnava and Śaiva religions, became exceedingly violent, and the Chola monarch, who according to some accounts, was at that time KERIKĀLA CHOLA, subsequently named KRIMI KOÑDA CHOLA, being a devout worshipper of Śiva, commanded all the Brahmans in his dominions to sign an acknowledgement of the supremacy of that divinity, bribing some of the most refractory, and terrifying others into acquiescence. RĀMĀNUJA, however, was impracticable, and the king sent armed men to seize him. With the assistance of his disciples, he effected his escape, and ascending the Ghāts, found refuge with the Jain sovereign of Mysore, VITALA DEVA, Vellāla Rāya. In consequence of rendering medical service to the daughter of this prince, or in the terms of the legend, expelling an evil spirit, a Brahma Rākshasa, by whom she was possessed, he obtained the monarch's grateful regard, and finally converted him to the Vaishnava faith. The Rájá assumed the title of Vishńu Vardhana. RÁMÁNUJA remained several years in Mysore, at a temple founded by the Rájá on Yádava Giri, now known as Mail Coṭay, for the reception of an image called Chavala Ráya, a form of Rañachhoř, or Krishńa, which the local traditions very ridiculously pretend he obtained from the Mohammedan sovereign of Delhi. RÁMÁNUJA resided here twelve years, but on the death of his persecutor, the Chola king, he returned to Śrī Ranga, on the Káveri, and there spent the remainder of his life in devout exercises and religious seclusion.

The establishments of the Rámánujyas are numerous in the Dekhan still, and the same country comprehends the site of the Gaddí, the pillow or seat of the primitive teacher; his spiritual throne, in fact, to which his disciples are successively elevated¹. This circumstance gives a superiority to the Acháryas of the Dakshińa, or south, over those of the Uttara, or north, into which they are at present divided.

¹ According to information obtained by Dr. Buchanan, RÁMÁNUJA founded 700 Maths, of which four only remain; one of the principal of these is at Mail Coṭay, or Dakshińa Badarikásrama, the Badari station of the south. RÁMÁNUJA also established 74 hereditary Guruships amongst his followers, the representatives of which still remain and dispute the supremacy with the Sannyásí members of the order; these last, however, are generally considered of the highest rank (Buchan. Mysore 2, 75). In another place (1, 144), he says that 89 Guruships were established, 5 in the Sannyásí class, and 84 in the secular order: the Madams of the five former are Ahobilam, Totádri, Raméśvara, Śrī Rangam, and Kánji.

The worship of the followers of RÁMÁNUJA, is addressed to VISHNU and to LAKSHMÍ, and their respective incarnations, either singly or conjointly; and the *Śrī Vaishnava*s, by which general name the sect is known, consist of corresponding subdivisions, as NÁRÁYAÑA, or LAKSHMÍ, or LAKSHMÍ NÁRÁYAÑA, or RÁMA or SÍTÁ, or SÍTÁ RÁMA, or KRISHNÁ, or RUKMINÍ, or any other modifications of Vishnú, or his consort, is the preferential object of the veneration of the votary¹. The Śrī Vaishnava worship in the north of India, is not very popular, and the sect is rather of a speculative than practical nature, although it does not require, in its teachers, secession from the world: the teachers are usually of the Brahmanical order, but the disciples may be of any caste¹.

Besides the temples appropriated to VISHNU and his consort, and their several forms, including those of KRISHNA and RAMA, and those which are celebrated as objects of pilgrimage, as Lakshmi-Balaji, Ramnath, and Ranganath, in the south; Badarinath, in the Himalaya, Jagannath, in Orissa, and Dwarka, on the Malabar Coast, images of metal or stone are usually set up in the houses of the private members of this sect, which are daily worshipped, and the temples and dwellings are all decorated with the Salagram stone and Tulasi plant.

The most striking peculiarities in the practices of this sect, are the individual preparation, and scrupulous privacy of their meals: they must not eat in cotton garments, but having bathed, must put on woollen or silk: the teachers allow their select pupils to assist them, but, in general, all the Ramanujas cook for themselves, and should the meal during this process, or whilst they are eating, attract even the looks of a stranger, the operation is instantly stopped, and the viands buried in the ground: a similar delicacy, in this respect, prevails amongst some other classes of Hindus, especially of the Rajput families, but it is not carried to so preposterous an extent².

² It is said, however, that there are two divisions of the sect,

The chief ceremony of initiation in all Hindu sects, is the communication by the teacher to the disciple of the Mantra, which generally consists of the name of some deity, or a short address to him; it is communicated in a whisper, and never lightly made known by the adept to profane ears. The Mantra of the RÁMÁNUJA sect is said to be the six syllable Mantra—or Om Rámáya namah; or Om, salutation to RÁMA¹.

Another distinction amongst sects, but merely of a civil character, is the term or terms with which the religious members salute each other when they meet, or in which they are addressed by the lay members. This amongst the Rámánujas is the phrase, Dásó 'smi, or Dásó 'ham; I am your slave; accompanied with the Prañám, or slight inclination of the head, and the application of the joined hands to the forehead. To the Acháryas, or supreme teachers of this sect, the rest perform the Ashláṅga Dañdawat or prostration of the body, with the application of eight parts—the forehead, breast, hands, knees, and insteps of the feet, to the ground.

one called Ávaraṇi, from Ávaraṇa, screening, or surrounding, and the other Anávaraṇi, from the members not observing such punctilious privacy.

The Hindu sects are usually discriminated by various fantastical streaks on their faces, breasts, and arms: for this purpose, all the Vaishnавas employ especially a white earth called Gopichandana, which, to be of the purest description, should be brought from Dwārakā, being said to be the soil of a pool at that place, in which the Goris drowned themselves when they heard of Krishna's death. The common Gopichandana, however, is nothing but a Magnesian or Calcareous Clay.

The marks of the Rāmānujas are two perpendicular white lines, drawn from the root of the hair to the commencement of each eye-brow, and a transverse streak connecting them across the root of the nose: in the centre is a perpendicular streak of red, made with red Sanders, or Roli, a preparation of Turmeric and Lime; they have also patches of Gopichandana, with a central red streak on the breast, and each upper arm: the marks are supposed to represent the Sankh, Chakra, Gadā, and *Padma*¹, or Shell, Discus, Club, and Lotus, which VISHNU bears in his four hands, whilst the central streak is Śrī, or *LAKSHMI*². Some

ये कण्ठलभतुलसीनलिनाशमालाः ये बाऊमूलपरिचिह्नितशङ्खचक्राः ।
ये वा ललाटपट्टे लसदूर्ध्वपुण्ड्राते वैष्णवा भुवनमाशु पवित्रयन्ति ॥
“They who bear the Tulasi round the neck, the rosary of Lotus seeds, have the shell and discus impressed upon their upper arm, and the upright streak along the centre of the forehead, they are Vaishnavas, and sanctify the world.”

² The efficacy of these marks is very great: we are told in the Kāśi Khaṇḍ, that YAMA directs his ministers to avoid such as have these objects carved on wooden stamps, with which they impress the emblems on their bodies, and others carry their devotion so far as to have the parts cicatrized with heated metallic models of the objects they propose to represent, but this is not regarded as a creditable practice¹: besides these marks, they wear a necklace of the wood of the Tulasi, and carry a rosary of the seeds of the same plant, or of the Lotus.

The principal authorities of this sect are the comments of the founder on the Sútras of VyÁSA, and other Vaidika works: they are written in Sanskrit, bear them, and the same work observes, that no sin can exist in the individuals who make use of them, be they of whatever caste.

ब्राह्मणः ज्ञात्रियो वैश्यः शूद्रो वा यदि वेतरः ।
विष्णुभक्तिसमायुक्तो चेयः सर्वोन्तमस्य सः ॥
शङ्खचक्राङ्कितततुः शिरसा मञ्जरीधरः ।
गोपीचन्द्रनलिप्ताङ्गो दृष्ट्वेत्तदधं कुतः ॥

तथाहि संतप्तशङ्खादिलिङ्गचिह्नतनुर्गरः ।
स सर्वपतकभोगी चाण्डालो जन्मकोटिभिः ॥
तं दिवं तपशङ्खादिलिङ्गाङ्कितततुं हरः ।
संभाव रौरवं याति यावदिन्द्राचतुर्दशः ॥

The reason also occurs—

ब्राह्मणस्य तनुर्ज्ञेया सर्वदेवानामाश्रिता ।
सा चेत्संतापिता राजन्मिमु वस्थानहे वथम् ॥

“The body of a Brahman is the abode of all the Gods, if that is consumed, where shall we abide?” It appears, however, that stamping the mark with a hot iron, is commonly in use in the Dekhan. A similar practice seems to have been known to some of the early Christians, and baptizing with fire was stamping the cross on the forehead with a hot iron.

and are the Śrī Bháshya, the Gitá Bháshya, the Vedártha Sangraha, Vedánta Pradípa, and Vedánta Sára: besides these, the works of Venkata Áchárya, are of great repute amongst them, as the Stotra Bháshya, and Śatadíshíni, and others: the Chánda Márvuta Vaidíka, and Trinśatadhyánam, are also works of authority, as is the Páncharátra of NÁRADA: of the Puráñas they acknowledge only six as authorities, the Vishńu, Náradíya, Gáruda, Padma, Váráha and the Bhágavat: the other twelve are regarded as Támasa, or originating in the principles of darkness and passion, as we have already observed. Besides these, the Rámánujas have a variety of popular works in the dialects of the South, one of which, the Guru Para, containing an account of the life of RÁMÁNUJA, was procured by DR. BUCHANAN, in the course of his statistical researches in Mysore.

The chief religious tenet of the Rámánujas, is the assertion that Vishńu is BRAHMÁ; that he was before all worlds, and was the cause and the creator of all. Although they maintain that Vishńu and the universe are one, yet, in opposition to the Vedánta doctrines, they deny that the deity is void of form or quality, and regard him as endowed with all good qualities, and with a two-fold form: the supreme spirit, Paramátmá, or cause, and the gross one, the effect, the universe or matter. The doctrine is hence called the Viśiṣṭhádwaita, or doctrine of unity with attributes. In these assertions they are followed by most of the Vaishńava sects. Creation originated in the wish of VISHNU, who was alone, without a second, to multiply himself: he said, I will become many; and he was individually embodied as visible and etherial light. After that, as a ball of clay may be moulded into various forms, so the grosser substance of the deity became manifest in the elements, and their combinations: the forms into which the divine matter is thus divided, are pervaded by a portion of the same vitality which belongs to the great cause of all, but which is distinct from his spiritual or eterial essence; here, therefore, the Rámánujas again oppose the Vedántikas, who identify* the Paramátmá and Jívátmá, or etherial and vital spirit: this vitality, though endlessly diffusible, is imperishable and eternal, and the matter of the universe, as being the same in substance with the Supreme Being, is alike without beginning or end: PURUSHOTTAMA, or NÁRAYAÑA, after having created man and animals, through the instrumentality of those subordinate agents whom he willed into existence for that purpose, still retained the supreme authority of the universe: so that the Rámánujas assert three predicates of the universe, comprehending the deity: it consists of Chit, or spirit, Achit, or matter, and Íswara, or God, or the enjoyer, the thing enjoyed, and the ruler and controller of both. Besides his primary and secondary form as the creator, and creation, the deity has assumed, at different times, particular forms and appearances, for the benefit of his creatures: he is, or has been visibly present amongst men, in five modifications: in his ARCHA, objects of worship, as images, &c.; in the Vibhavas, or Avatáras, as the fish, the boar, &c.; in certain forms called Vyúhas, of which four are enumerated, VÁSUDEVA, or KRÍSHNA, BALARÁMA, PRADYUMNA, and ANIRUDDHA; fourthly, in the Súkshma form, which, when perfect, comprises six qualities: Virajas, absence of human passion; Vinrityu, immortality; Viśoka, exemption from care or pain; Vijighatsá, absence of natural wants; Satyakáma, and Satyasankalpa, the love and practice of truth; and sixthly, as the Antarátmá, or Antaryámi, the human soul, or individualised spirit: these are to be worshipped seriatim, as the ministrant ascends in the scale of perfection, and adoration therefore is five-fold; Abhigamanam, cleaning and purifying the temples, images, &c. Upádánam, providing flowers and perfumes for religious rites; Ijyá, the presentation of such offerings, blood offerings being uniformly prohibited, it may be observed, by all the Vaishnávas; Swádhyáya, counting the rosary and repeating the names of the divinity, or any of his forms; and Yoga, the effort to unite with the deity*: the reward of these acts is elevation to the seat of VISHNU, and enjoyment of like state with his own, interpreted to be perpetual residence in Vaikuṇṭha, or Vishnú's heaven, in a condition of pure ecstasy and eternal rapture.

* [Sarva Darśana Sangraha, p. 54–56.]

The Rámánujas are not very numerous in the north of India, where they are better known as Śrī Vaiśhnavas; they are decidedly hostile to the Śaiva sect, and are not on very friendly terms with the modern votaries of Kṛiṣṇa, although they recognise that deity as an incarnation of Viṣṇu¹.

RÁMÁNANDÍS, or RÁMÁVATS.

The followers of RÁMÁNAND are much better known than those of RÁMÁNUJA in upper Hindustan: they are usually considered as a branch of the RÁMÁNUJA sect, and address their devotions peculiarly to RÁMACHANDRA, and the divine manifestations connected with Viṣṇu in that incarnation, as SÍTÁ, LAKSHMAÑA, and HANUMÁN.

¹ Dubois, in his 8th Chapter, has some details of the Vaiśhnava mendicants, as met with in the Dekhan: his account, however, does not apply to the Rámánuja, or any other Vaiśhnava sect, as known in these provinces, although a few of the particulars may be true, if confined to the Vaishnava Vairágis—the *Dakhini Vaishnava*s must be, therefore, a very different class from those that are met within any other part of India, or the Abbé must have mixed, as is not unusual with him, a small quantum of truth, with a very large portion of error: it is, indeed, impossible to think him correct, when he states, that “the sectaries of Vishnu eat publicly of all sorts of meat, except beef, and drink spirituous liquors without shame or restraint, and that they are reproached with being the chief promoters of that abominable sacrifice, the Śakti Pújá” now, it is not true of any sect in Upper India, that the practices the Abbé mentions occur at all, except in the utmost privacy and secrecy, and if even in that way they do occur, it is certainly not amongst the Vaishnava Vairágis, but with very different sects, as we shall hereafter see.

RÁMÁNAND is sometimes considered to have been the immediate disciple of RÁMÁNUJA, but this appears to be an error: a more particular account makes him the fifth in descent from that teacher, as follows—the pupil and successor of RÁMÁNUJA was DEVÁNAND; of DEVÁNAND, HARINAND; of HARINAND, RÁGHAVÁNAND, and of this last, RÁMÁNAND, an enumeration which, if correct, would place RÁMÁNAND about the end of the 13th century¹: there is great reason, however, to doubt his being entitled to so remote a date, and consequently to question the accuracy of his descent from RÁMÁNUJA: we shall have occasion to infer, hereafter, from the accounts given of the dates of other teachers, that RÁMÁNAND was not earlier than the end of the 14th, or beginning of the 15th century.

According to common tradition, the schism of RÁMÁNAND originated in resentment of an affront offered him by his fellow disciples, and sanctioned by his teacher. It is said, that he had spent some time in travelling through various parts of India, after which he returned to the Math, or residence of his superior: his brethren objected to him, that in the course of his peregrinations, it was impossible he could have observed that privacy in his meals, which is a vital observance of the Rámánuja sect, and as RÁGHAVÁNAND admitted the validity of the objection, RÁMÁNAND was condemned to feed in a place apart from the rest of the disciples: he was highly incensed at the order, and retired from the society altogether, establishing a schism of his own.

The residence of RÁMÁNAND was at Benares, at the Pancha Gangá Ghát, where a Math, or monastery of his followers, is said to have existed, but to have been destroyed by some of the Musalman princes: at present there is merely a stone plat-form, in the vicinity, bearing the supposed impression of his feet, but there are many Maths of his followers, of celebrity at Benares, whose Pancháyat, or council, is the chief authority amongst the Rámávats in Upper India: we shall have frequent occasion to mention these Maths, or convents, and a short account of them may, therefore, here be acceptable.

Most of the religious sects of which we have to give an account, comprise various classes of individuals, resolvable, however, especially into two, whom (for want of more appropriate terms) we must call, perhaps, Clerical and Lay: the bulk of the votaries are generally, but not always of the latter order, whilst the rest, or the Clerical class, are sometimes monastic, and sometimes secular: most of the sects, especially the Vaiśńavas, leave this distinction a matter of choice: the Vallabhácháris, indeed, give the preference to married teachers, and all their Gosáins are men of business and family: the preference, however, is usually assigned to teachers of an ascetic or cœnobitic life, whose pious meditations are not distracted by the affections of kindred, or the cares of the world: the doctrine that introduced similar unsocial institutions into the Christian church, in the fourth century, being still most triumphantly prevalent in the east, the land of its nativity; the establishments of which we are treating, and the still existing practices of solitary mortification, originating in the “specious appearance and pompous sound of that maxim of the ancient philosophy, that in order to the attainment of true felicity and communion with God, it was necessary that the soul should be separated from the body even here below, and that the body was to be macerated and mortified for that purpose.” (Mosheim. i. 378.)

Of the cœnobitic members of the different communities, most pursue an erratic and mendicant life: all of them, indeed, at some period have led such a life, and have travelled over various parts of India singly or in bodies, subsisting by alms, by merchandise, and sometimes, perhaps, by less unexceptionable means, like the Sarabaites of the east, or the mendicant friars of the Latin Church: they have, however, their fixed rallying points, and are sure of finding, in various parts of their progress, establishments of their own, or some friendly fraternity where they are for a reasonably moderate period lodged and fed. When old or infirm, they sit down in some previously existing Math, or establish one of their own.

The Maths, Asthals, or Akhádás, the residences of the monastic communities of the Hindus, are scattered over the whole country: they vary in structure and extent, according to the property of which the proprietors are possessed; but they generally comprehend a set of huts or chambers for the *Mahant*¹, or Superior, and his permanent pupils; a temple, sacred to the deity whom they worship, or the Samádhi, or shrine of the founder of the sect, or some eminent teacher; and a Dharma Sálá, one or more sheds, or buildings for the accommodation of the mendicants or travellers, who are constantly visiting the Math: ingress and egress is free to all; and, indeed, a restraint upon personal liberty seems never to have entered into the conception of any of the religious legislators of the Hindus.

“At the distance of four Yojanas, west from Hastinapur, was a square plot of ground, extending a cos on each side; in the centre of it stood a large mansion, constructed of the timber of the Tal, and exactly facing it another a hundred cubits in length; upon the top of this last were many cages full of parrots, and within it resided five hundred pupils, occupied in the study of various Sástras: the first was the dwelling of the Teacher, like Brahmá with four heads, like the Serpent King, with a thousand faces, and Rudra, with a five-fold head, amongst his disciples like the waves of the ocean, and enabling them to overcome the universe in unparalleled profundity and extent of knowledge: he was attended by numerous slaves of both sexes: attached to his dwelling were wells and reservoirs, and gardens and orchards, and his person was pampered with the choicest viands procured daily by his disciples. In his court-yard were two Temples, on a circular mound, for the worship of the Viśvadevas and the Sálagrám, in the form of Lakshmi Náráyaṇa.”

The Math is under the entire controul of a Mahant, or Superior, with a certain number of resident Chelás, or disciples; their number varies from three or four to thirty or forty, but in both cases there are always a number of vagrant or out-members: the resident Chelás are usually the elders of the body, with a few of the younger as their attendants and scholars; and it is from the senior and more proficient of these ascetics, that the Mahant is usually elected.

In some instances, however, where the Mahant has a family, the situation descends in the line of his posterity: where an election is to be effected, it is conducted with much solemnity, and presents a curious picture of a regularly organised system of church policy, amongst these apparently unimportant and straggling communities.

The Maths of various districts look up to some one of their own order as chief, and they all refer to that connected with their founder, as the common head: under the presidency, therefore, of the Mahant of that establishment, wherever practicable, and in his absence, of some other of acknowledged pre-eminence, the Mahants of the different Maths assemble, upon the decease of one of their brethren, to elect a successor. For this purpose they regularly examine the Chelás, or disciples of the deceased, the ablest of whom is raised to the vacant situation: should none of them be qualified, they choose a Mahant from the pupils of some other teacher, but this is rarely necessary, and unless necessary, is never had recourse to. The new Mahant is then regularly installed, and is formally invested with the cap, the rosary, the frontal mark, or Tiká, or any other monastic insignia, by the president of the assembly. Under the native Government, whether Mohammedan or Hindu—the election of the superior of one of these establishments was considered as a matter of sufficient moment to demand the attention of the Governor of the province, who, accordingly, in person, or by his deputy, presided at the election: at present, no interference is exercised by the ruling authorities, and rarely by any lay character, although occasionally, a Rájá, or a Zemindár, to whose liberality the Math is indebted, or in whose lands it is situated, assumes the right of assisting and presiding at the election.

The Mahants of the sects, in which the election takes places, are generally assisted by those of the sects connected with them: each is attended by a train of disciples, and individuals of various mendicant tribes repair to the meeting; so that an assemblage of many hundreds, and sometimes of thousands, occurs: as far as the resources of the Math, where they are assembled, extend, they are maintained at its expence; when those fail, they must shift for themselves; the election is usually a business of ten or twelve days, and during the period of its continuance, various points of polity or doctrine are discussed in the assembly.

Most of the Maths have some endowments of land, but with the exception of a few established in large cities, and especially at Benares, the individual amount of these endowments is, in general, of little value. There are few Maths in any district that possess five hundred Bighás of land, or about one hundred and seventy acres, and the most usual quantity is about thirty or forty Bighás only: this is sometimes let out for a fixed rent; at other times it is cultivated by the Math on its own account; the highest rental met with, in any of the returns procured, is six hundred and thirty rupees per annum. Although, however, the individual portions are trifling, the great number of these petty establishments renders the aggregate amount considerable, and as the endowed lands have been granted Máfi, or free of land tax, they form, altogether, a serious deduction from the revenue of each district.

Besides the lands they may hold, the Maths have other sources of support: the attachment of lay votaries frequently contributes very liberally to their wants: the community is also sometimes concerned, though, in general, covertly, in traffic, and besides those means of supply, the individual members of most of them sally forth daily to collect alms from the vicinity, the aggregate of which, generally in the shape of rice or other grains, furnishes forth the common table: it only remains to observe, that the tenants of these Maths, particularly the *Vaishnava*s, are most commonly of a quiet inoffensive character, and the Mahants especially are men of talents and respectability, although they possess, occasionally, a little of that self-importance, which the conceit of superior sanctity is apt to inspire: there are, it is true, exceptions to this innocuous character, and robberies, and murders have been traced to these religious establishments.

The especial object of the worship of RÁMÁNANDA's followers is VISHNU, as RÁMACHANDRA: they, of course, reverence all the other incarnations of VISHNU, but they maintain the superiority of RÁMA, in the present or Kali Yug; hence they are known collectively as Rámávats, although the same variety prevails amongst them, as amongst the Rámánujas, as to the exclusive or collective worship of the male and female members of this incarnation, or of Ráma and Sítá, singly, or jointly, or *Sítá Ráma*¹: individuals of them also pay particular veneration to some of the other forms of VISHNU, and they hold in like estimation, as the Rámánujas, and every Vaishnava sect, the Sálagrám stone and Tulasi plant; their forms of worship correspond with those of the Hindus generally, but some of the mendicant members of the sect, who are very numerous, and are usually known as Vairágis, or *Virakta*s, consider all form of adoration superfluous, beyond the incessant invocation of the name of KRISHNA and RÁMA.

The practices of this sect are of less precise nature than those of the RÁMÁNUJAS, it being the avowed object of the founder to release his disciples from those letters which he had found so inconvenient: in allusion to this, indeed, he gave, it is said, the appellation Avadhúta, or Liberated, to his scholars, and they admit no particular observances with respect to eating or bathing¹, but follow their own inclination, or comply with the common practice in these respects. The initiatory Mantra is said to be Śrī Ráma—the salutation is Jaya Śrī Ráma, Jaya Rám, or Sítá Rám: their marks are the same as those of the preceding, except that the red perpendicular streak on the forehead is varied, in shape and extent, at the pleasure of the individual, and is generally narrower than that of the RÁMÁNUJAS.

Various sects are considered to be but branches of the Rámánandi Vaishnávas, and their founders are asserted to have been amongst his discip'les: of these disciples, twelve are particularised as the most eminent, some of whom have given origin to religious distinctions of great celebrity, and, although their doctrines are often very different from those of RÁMÁNAND, yet the popular tradition is so far corroborated, that they maintain an amicable intercourse with the followers of RÁMÁNAND, and with each other.

The twelve chief disciples of RÁMÁNAND are named, as follows—ĀŚÁNAND, KABÍR, the weaver, RAIDÁS, the Chamár, or currier, PÍPÁ, the Rájaput, SURSU-

¹ The Vairágis of this sect, and some others, eat and drink together, without regard to tribe or caste, and are thence called Kulatúti, or Varnatúti.

RÁNAND, SUKHÁNAND, BHAVÁNAND, DHANNA the Játi, SENA, the barber—MAHÁNAND, PARAMÁNAND, and ŚRÍÁNAND¹, a list which shews, that the school of RÁMÁNAND admitted disciples of every caste: it is, in fact, asserted in the Bhakta Málá, that the distinction of caste is inadmissible according to the tenets of the Rámánandis: there is no difference, they say, between the BHAGAVÁN and the Bhakt, or the deity and his worshipper; but BHAGAVÁN appeared in inferior forms; as a Fish, a Boar, a Tortoise, &c., so therefore the Bhakt may be born as a Chamár, a Koli, a Chhípi, or any other degraded caste.

The various character of the reputed disciples of RÁMÁNAND, and a consideration of the tenets of those sects which they have founded, lead to a conclusion, that this individual, if he did not invent, gave fresh force to a very important encroachment upon the orthodox system: he, in fact, abrogated the distinction of caste amongst the religious orders, and taught, that the holy character who quitted the ties of nature and society, shook off, at the same time, all personal distinction—this seems to be the proper import of the term Avadhúta, which RÁMÁNAND is said to have affixed to his followers, and they were liberated from more important restraints than those of regimen and ablution: the popular character of the works of this school corroborates this view of RÁMÁNANDA's innovation; ŚANKARA and RÁMÁNUJA writing to and for the Brahmanical order alone, composed chiefly, if not solely, Sanskrit commentaries on the text of the Vedas, or Sanskrit expositions of their peculiar doctrines, and the teachers of these opinions, whether monastic or secular, are indispensably of the Brahmanical caste—it does not appear that any works exist which are attributed to RÁMÁNAND himself, but those of his followers are written in the provincial dialects, and addressed to the capacity, as well as placed within the reach, of every class of readers, and every one of those may become a Vairági, and rise, in time, to be a Guru or Mahant.

We shall have occasion to speak again particularly of such of the above mentioned disciples of RÁMÁNAND, as constituted separate sects, but there are several who did not aspire to that distinction, and whose celebrity is, nevertheless, still very widely spread throughout Hindustan: there are also several personages belonging to the sects of particular note, and we may, therefore, here pause, to extract a few of the anecdotes which the Bhakta Málá relates of those individuals, and which, if they do not afford much satisfactory information regarding their objects, will at least furnish some notion of the character of this popular work.

Pípá, the Rájaput, is called the Rájá of Gángaraun: he was originally a worshipper of Deví, but abandoned her service for that of VISHNU, and repaired to Benares to put himself under the tuition of RÁMÁNAND. Having disturbed the sage at an inconvenient season, RÁMÁNAND angrily wished that he might fall into the well of his court-yard, on which PÍPÁ, in the fervour of his obedience, attempted to cast himself into it to accomplish the desire of the saint. This act was with difficulty prevented by the by-standers, and the attempt so pleased RÁMÁNAND that he immediately admitted the Rájá amongst his disciples.

PÍPÁ, after some time, abandoned his earthly possessions, and accompanied by only one of his wives, named SÍRÁ, as ardent a devotee as himself, adopting a life of mendicity, accompanied RÁMÁNAND and his disciples to Dwáriká. Here he plunged into the sea to visit the submarine shrine of KRISHNA, and was affectionately received by that deity: after spending some days with him, PÍPÁ returned, when the fame of the occurrence spread, and attracted great crowds to see him. Finding them incompatible with his devotions, PÍPÁ left Dwáriká privately: on the road some Paátháns carried off his wife, but RÁMA himself rescued her, and slew the ravishers. The life of this vagrant Rájá is narrated at considerable length in the Bhakta Málá, and is made up of the most absurd and silly legends. On one occasion the Rájá encounters a furious lion in a forest; he hangs a rosary round his neck, whispers the Mantra of Ráma, and makes him tranquil in a moment; he then lectures the lion on the impropriety of devouring men and kine, and sends him away penitent, and with a pious purpose to do so no more.

Of SURSURÁNAND we have a silly enough story of some cakes that were given to him by a Mlechchha being changed when in his mouth into a Tulasi leaf. Of DHANNA, it is related that a Brahman, by way of a frolic, gave him a piece of stone, and desired him to offer to it first, whatever he was about to eat. DHANNA obeyed, looking upon the stone as the representative of VISHNU, who, being pleased with his devotion, appeared, and constantly tended the cattle of the simple Ját: at last he recommended his becoming the disciple of RÁMÁNAND, for which purpose he went to Benares, and having received the Mantra, returned to his farm. RAGHUNÁTH, or in the text ÁSÁNAND, succeeded RÁMÁNAND in the Gaddi, or the Pillow of the Mahant. NARAHARI or HARYÁNAND was also a pupil of RÁMÁNAND, whom it is difficult to identify with any one in the list above given: we have a characteristic legend of him.

Being one day in want of fuel to dress his meat, he directed one of his pupils to proceed to a neighbouring temple of Deví, and bring away from it any portion of the timber he could conveniently remove: this was done, to the great alarm, but utter helplessness of the goddess, who could not dispute the authority of a mortal of HARYÁNAND's sanctity. A neighbour who had observed this transaction laboured under a like want of wood: at the instigation of his wife, he repaired also to the temple, and attempted to remove one of the beams, when the goddess, indignant at his presumption, hurled him down and broke his neck: the widow hearing of her husband's fate, immediately hastened to the temple, and liberally abused the vindictive deity. Deví took advantage of the business to make a bargain for her temple, and restored the man to life, on condition that he would ever afterwards buy fuel for HARYÁNAND.

The legends of such other disciples of RÁMÁNAND as occur in the Bhakta Málá will be given in their proper places, and it will be sufficient here to confine our further extracts from that authority to NÁBHÁJÍ, the author, SÚR DÁS, and TULASÍ DÁS, to whose poetical talents the late version of it is largely indebted, and JAYADEVA, whose songs have been translated by Sir William Jones.

NÁBHÁJÍ, the author of the Bhakta Málá, was by birth a Dom, a caste whose employ is making baskets and various sorts of wicker work. The early commentators say he was of the Hanumán Vanś, or Monkey tribe, because, observes the modern interpreter, Bánar, a monkey, signifies in the Marwar language a Dom, and it is not proper to mention the caste of a Vaishnava by name: he was born blind, and when but five years old, was exposed by his parents, during a time of scarcity, to perish in the woods: in this situation he was found by AGRADÁS and KÍL, two Vaishnava teachers: they had compassion upon his helplessness, and KÍL sprinkled his eyes with the water of his Kamáddalu, or water pot, and the child saw: they carried NÁBHÁJI to their Math, where he was brought up, and received the initiatory Mantra from AGRADÁS: when arrived at maturity, he wrote the Bhakta Málá by desire of his Guru. The age of NÁBHÁJI must be about two centuries, or two and a half, as he is made contemporary with MÁN SINH, the Rájá of Jaynagar, and with AKBAR. He should date much earlier, if one account of his spiritual descent which makes him the fourth from RÁMÁNAND¹ be admitted, but in the Bhakta Málá, KRÍSHNÁ DÁS, the second in that account, does not descend in a direct line from RÁMÁNAND, but derives his qualifications as teacher from the immediate instructions of VISHNU himself: there is no necessity, therefore, to connect NÁBHÁJI with RÁMÁNAND. The same authority places him also something later, as it states that TULASÍ DÁS, who was contemporary with SHÁH JEHÁN, visited NÁBHÁJI at Brindávan. It is probable, therefore, that this writer flourished at the end of AKBAR's reign, and in the commencement of that of his successor.

The notices we have of SÚR DÁS are very brief: he was blind, a great poet, and a devout worshipper of VISHNU, in whose honour all his poems are written: they are songs and hymns of various lengths, but usually short, and the greater number are Padas, or simply stanzas of four lines, the first line forming a subject, which is repeated as the last and the burthen of the song, Padas being very generally sung, both at public entertainments, and the devotional exercises of the Vaishnava ascetics. SÚR DÁS is said to have composed 125,000 of these Padas: he is almost entitled to be considered as the founder of a sect, as blind beggars carrying about musical instruments, to which they chant stanzas in honour of VISHNU, are generally termed Súr Dásis. The tomb of SÚR DÁS, a simple mound of earth, is considered to be situated in a tope near Sívpur, a village about two miles to the north of Benares. There is also an account of a saint of the same name in the Bhakta Málá, who is possibly a different person from the blind bard. This was a Brahman, Amín, or collector of the Pergunnah of Saúdila, in the reign of AKBAR, and who with more zeal than honesty made over his collections to the shrine of MADANA MOHANA, a form of KRISHNA, at Brindávan, and sent to the treasury chests filled with stones¹: the minister TOÚDAR MALL, however, although a Hindu, was not disposed to confirm this transfer, and he had the defaulter arrested and thrown into prison. SÚR DÁS then applied to AKBAR, and the good natured monarch, who probably thought his collector more fool than knave, set him at liberty. He retired to Brīndávan and there continued to lead a religious and ascetic life.

The account of TULASÍ DÁS in the Bhakta Málá represents him as having been incited to the peculiar adoration of RÁMA by the remonstrances of his wife, to whom he was passionately attached: he adopted a vagrant life, visited Benares, and afterwards went to Chitrakúta, where he had a personal interview with Hanumán, from whom he received his poetical inspiration, and the power of working miracles: his fame reached Dehli, where SHÁH JEHÁN was emperor: the monarch sent for him to produce the person of RÁMA, which TULASÍ DÁS refusing to do, the king threw him into confinement; the people of the vicinity, however, speedily petitioned for his liberation, as they were alarmed for their own security: myriads of monkies having collected about the prison, and begun to demolish it, and the adjacent buildings. SHÁH JEHÁN set the poet at liberty, and desired him to solicit some favour as a reparation for the indignity he had suffered: TULASÍ DÁS, accordingly, requested him to quit ancient Dehli, which was the abode of RÁMA, and in compliance with this request the emperor left it, and founded the new city, thence named Sháh Jehánábád. After this, TULASÍ DÁS went to Brīndávan, where he had an interview with NÁBHÁJÍ: he settled there, and strenuously advocated the worship of Sítá Ráma, in preference to that of Rádhá Kríshná.

Besides these legendary tales of this celebrated writer, whose works exercise more influence upon the great body of Hindu population than the whole voluminous series of Sanskrit composition, we have other notices of him collected from his own works, or preserved by tradition, that differ in some respects from the above. From these it appears, that TULASI DÁS was a Brahman of the Sarvárya branch, and a native of Hájipur, near Chitrakúta; when arrived at maturity, he settled at Benares, and held the office of Diwán to the Rájá of that city: his spiritual preceptor was JAGANNÁTH DÁS, a pupil, as well as NÁBHÁJÍ, of AGRADÁS: he followed this teacher to Govardhan, near Bríndávan, but afterwards returned to Benares, and there commenced his Hindi version of the Rámáyaña, in the year of Samvat 1631, when he was thirty-one years of age. Besides this work, which is highly popular, TULASI DÁS is the author of a *Sat Sai, or collection of one hundred stanzas on various subjects: of the Rám Guhávalí, a series of verses in praise of RÁMA, of a Gítávalí, and Vinaya Patriká, poetical compositions of a devotional or moral tendency, and of a great variety of Hymns—as Rágas, Kavits, and Padas, in honour of his tutelary deity and his consort, or RÁMA and SÍTÁ. TULASI DÁS continued to reside at Benares, where he built a temple to Sítá Ráma, and founded a Math adjoining, both which are still in existence: he died in the year of the Samvat era, 1680, or A. D. 1624, in the reign of JEHÁNGÍR¹, and the legendary story of his intercourse with SHÁH JEHÁN, is consequently an anachronism.

JAYADEVA was an inhabitant of a village called Kinduvilva, where he led an ascetic life, and was distinguished for his poetical powers, and the fervour of his devotion to VISHNU. He at first adopted a life of continence, but was subsequently induced to marry. A Brahman had dedicated his daughter to JAGANNÁTH, but on his way to the shrine of that deity was addressed by him, and desired to give the maiden to JAYADEVA who was one with himself. The saint, who it should appear had no other shelter than the shade of a tree, was very unwilling to burthen himself with a bride, but her father disregarded his refusal, and leaving his daughter with him departed. JAYADEVA then addressed the damsels, and asked her what she proposed to do, to which she replied: "whilst I was in my father's house, I was obedient to his will; he has now presented me to you, and I am subject to your pleasure; if you reject me, what remains for me but to die?" The saint finding there was no help, turned householder, and removed the image he had worshipped in the air into his dwelling, by desire, it is said, of the object of his adoration. In his new condition he composed the Gitá Govinda, in which KRISHNÁ himself assisted, for on one occasion, JAYADEVA being puzzled how to describe the charms of RÁDHÁ, laid down the paper for a happier moment, and went to bathe. KRISHNÁ, assuming his person, entered his house, and wrote the requisite description, much to the poet's astonishment on his return home.

Of the Gitá Govinda it is said, that the Rájá of Niláchala (Orissa) composed a poem similarly named, but when the two works were placed before JAGANNÁTH, he took the work of JAYADEVA to his bosom, and threw that of the Rájá out of his temple. It is also said, that the Gitá Govinda was sung in the court of VIKRAMA, thus assigning to it an antiquity which there is no reason to suspect it can justly claim.

JAYADEVA being desirous of performing a particular rite for his idol, resumed his erratic habits, and succeeded in collecting a considerable sum of money for this purpose: on the road he was attacked by Thags, or thieves, who robbed him, and cut off his hands and feet. In this state he was found by a Rájá who took him home, and had his wounds healed. Shortly afterwards the thieves, disguised as religious mendicants, came to the court of the Rájá. JAYADEVA recognized them, and overwhelmed them with benefits. On their departure, two of the Rájá's people were sent to attend them to the confines of the Ráj, who on their way asked them how they had merited the saint's particular regard. To this they replied, that they had been his fellows in the service of a Rájá, who had ordered them to put him to death: they however only mutilated him, and his gratitude for their sparing his life was the reason he had treated them so kindly. They had no sooner uttered these words, than the earth opened and swallowed them. The servants of the Rájá returned, and reported the occurrence, when a fresh miracle took place—the hands and feet of JAYADEVA sprouted forth again. The Rájá being filled with astonishment, requested the saint to explain these events, which he did by narrating what had befallen him.

After remaining some time with the Rájá where he restored to life his own wife PADMÁVATÍ, who had voluntarily put an end to herself, he returned to Kinduvíra. Here the Ganges, which was then eighteen eos distant, and to which he went daily to bathe, requested him not to undergo so much fatigue, as she would rather come to him. The proposal was accepted by the saint, and according to our guide, the river now runs close to the village.

The ascetic and mendicant followers of RÁMÁNAND, known indiscriminately as Rámánandís or Rámávats, are by far the most numerous class of sectaries in Gangetic India: in Bengal they are comparatively few: beyond this province, as far as to *Allahábád*¹, although perhaps the most numerous, they yield in influence and wealth to the Śaiva branches, especially to the Atīts: hence, however, they predominate, and either by themselves, or their kindred divisions, almost engross the whole of the country along the Ganges and Jamna: in the district of Agra, they alone constitute seven-tenths of the ascetic population. The Rāmānandīs have very numerous votaries, but they are chiefly from the poorer and inferior classes, with the exception of the Rājaputs and military Brahmāns, amongst whom the poetical works of Súr Dás and Tulasí Dás maintain the pre-eminence of Rāma and his Bhakts.

KABÍR PANTHÍS.

Amongst the twelve disciples of Rámánand the most celebrated of all, and one who seems to have produced, directly or indirectly, a greater effect on the state of popular belief than any other, was Kabír: with an unprecedented boldness he assailed the whole system of idolatrous worship, and ridiculed the learning of the Pāndīts, and doctrines of the Śāstras, in a style peculiarly well suited to the genius of his countrymen to whom he addressed himself, whilst he also directed his compositions to the Musalman, as well as to the Hindu faith, and with equal severity attacked the Mullá and Korán. The effect of his lessons, as confined to his own immediate followers, will be shewn to have been considerable, but their indirect effect has been still greater; several of the popular sects being little more than ramifications from his stock, whilst Nának Sháh, the only Hindu reformer who has established a national faith, appears to have been chiefly indebted for his religious notions to his predecessor KABÍR¹. This sect therefore claims particular attention.

¹ MALCOLM says, that NÁNAK constantly referred to the writings of the celebrated Mohammedan CABIR, (A. R. XI, 267.) and the Kabir Panthis assert, that he has incorporated several thousand passages from Kabir's writings. As to Kabir's being a Mohammedan, I shall allude to the improbability, I may say impossibility, of this in the text; nor is COL. MALCOLM more accurate when he calls him a celebrated Ssufi, for his doctrines have nothing in common apparently with that sect; indeed I think it not at all improbable that no such person as KABIR ever existed, and that his name is a mere cover to the innovations of some freethinker amongst the Hindus: perhaps some one of those considered as his principal disciples: his names are very suspicious, and Jndní, the sage, or Kabir, the greatest, are generic rather than individual denominations: at any rate, even if the individual were distinct, we must suppose that the name which occurs in his writings is nothing more than the Takhallus, or assumed name, under which both Musalman and Hindu poets have been accustomed to send their compositions into the world. To return, however, to the obligations which the popular reli-

The origin of the founder of this sect is variously narrated, although in the main points the traditions are agreed: the story told in the Bhakta Málá is, that he was the son of the virgin widow of a Brahman, whose father was a follower of RÁMÁNAND: at his daughter's repeated request, he took her to see RÁMÁNAND, and that teacher, without adverting to her situation, saluted her with the benediction he thought acceptable to all women, and wished her the conception of a son: his words could not be re-called, and the young widow, in order to conceal the disgrace thus inflicted on her, contrived to be privately delivered, and exposed the child: it was found by a weaver and his wife, and brought up as their own.

The followers of KABÍR do not admit more than the conclusion of this legend: according to them, the child, who was no other than the incarnate deity, was found floating on a Lotus in Lahartaláb, a lake, or pond near Benares, by the wife of a weaver, named NIMÁ*, who, with her husband NÚRÍ, was attending a wedding procession: she took the child up, and shewed it to her husband, who being addressed by the child, and gions owe to the real or supposed KABÍR, I find him avowedly or unavowedly cited by Bábá Lál, and in the writings of the Sádhs, the Satnámis, the Śrī Náránis and Śínyádvádis, and I am told that the Dádú Panthis, and Daryá Dásis are equally indebted to him.

desired to take him to Káši, fled with terror, thinking they had got hold of some incarnate demon: after having run to the distance of about a mile, he was surprised to find the child before him, by whom his fear was tranquillised, and he was persuaded to return to his wife, and bring up, without anxiety or alarm, the infant they had so marvellously discovered.

All traditions concur in making KABÍR the disciple of RÁMÁNAND, although various stories are narrated of the method by which he obtained that distinction, and overcame the objections started to him as a man of low caste, or, according to very general belief, of the Mohammedan persuasion: he succeeded at last by surprise, having put himself in the way of that teacher on the steps of the gháṭ down which he went at day-break to bathe, so as to be struck with his foot, on which RÁMÁNAND exclaimed, Rám, Rám, words that KABÍR assumed, and RÁMÁNAND acknowledged to be the initiatory Mantra, which forms the bond of union between a Guru and his disciple.

The story of KABÍR's being a disciple of RÁMÁNAND, however told, and, although perhaps not literally true in any fashion, may be so far correct, that KABÍR was roused by the innovations of that sectary to adopt and extend the schism, and seems to place at contiguous periods the eras at which they flourished: according to the Kabír Panthíś, their founder was present in the world three hundred years, or from 1149 to 1449¹, but of these dates we cannot admit the accuracy of more than one at most, and as the latter is the more recent, it is the more probable: agreeable to this is the connexion of KABÍR's writings with the faith of NÁNAK SHÁH, who began to teach about 1490, and it also confirms a particular account, current amongst his followers, of his openly vindicating his doctrines before SEKANDER SHÁH¹, in whose time FERISHTA has

"In the Samvat 1205 JNÁNÍ meditated, was manifest at Kási, and declared the text called Taksár: in the Samvat 1505 he journeyed to Magar, and on the 11th of the light fortnight of Aghan, air mixed with air."

¹ There is a Ramaini to that effect, and the following story is told, with the usual marvellous embellishments, in the Bhakta Málá; in that work it is said, his mother complained to SEKANDER Pádsháh of her son's having deserted the true faith, on which the king sent for him; he appeared with the Tíká and Málá, and when told to make the customary Salám, he replied, "I know none but Rám, what use is there in prostrating myself to a monarch?" Enraged at his behaviour, the king ordered him to be chained hand and foot, and thrown into the river. The water bore him to shore. He then commanded him to be cast into fire, but the flames played harmless round him. He then directed him to be trodden to death by an elephant, but as soon as the animal saw the sage, he turned tail and ran away. The king mounted his own elephant, resolved to execute his commands in person, but when he approached, KABÍR transformed himself into a lion. The Monarch then convinced of his divine character alighted, and falling at his feet, offered him any lands and villages he might choose: these offers he declined, saying, "Rám is my wealth: of what avail are worldly possessions, but noticed, that some religious disputes, possibly connected with the history of KABÍR, or that of some of his disciples, did occur.

These circumstances, connected with the acknowledged date of his death, render it exceedingly probable that Kabír flourished about the beginning of the 15th century—and as it is also not unlikely that his innovations were connected with the previous exertions of RÁMÁNAND, consequently that teacher must have lived about the end of the 14th.

According to one account, KABÍR was originally named Jnáni, the knowing or wise. The Musalmans, it is said, claim him as one of their persuasion, but to set father, and son, and brother, at deadly variance?" He returned to his abode, and remained unmolested. [Price, Hindoo and Hindust. Sel. I, 86.] •

COLONEL MALCOLM in the note before cited, places him in the reign of Shír Sháh; this is, however, at variance with his own statements; NÁNAK was in the height of his career in 1527, (A. R. XI, 206.) then imparting to BABER tenets which he had partly borrowed from the writings of KABÍR, and which must consequently have been some time previously promulgated: but Shír Sháh did not commence his reign till 1542, and it was therefore impossible for KABÍR to have lived in his reign, and at the same time to have instigated by his own innovations the more successful ones of NÁNAK. KABÍR's being contemporary with SEKANDER, is also mentioned in PRIYA DÁSA's expansion of the Bhakta Málá: it is likewise stated in the Kholassat al tawárikh, and is finally established by ABULFAZL, who says that KABÍR, the Unitarian, lived in the reign of Sultán SECANDER Lodi (Ay: Ac: 2, 38.). [G. de Tassy, histoire de la littérature Hindou et Hindoustani. Paris: 1839 & 47. Vol. I, p. 275. II, 6.]

his conversancy with the Hindu Sástras, and evidently limited knowledge of the Mohammedan authorities in matters of religion, render such a supposition perfectly unwarrantable: at any rate tradition represents it to have occasioned a contest between them and the Hindus respecting the disposal of his corpse, the latter insisting on burning, the Musalmans on burying it; in the midst of the dispute, KABÍR himself appeared amongst them, and desiring them to look under the cloth supposed to cover his mortal remains, immediately vanished: on obeying his instructions, they found nothing under the cloth, but a heap of flowers: one half of these BANÁR Rájá or BÍRSINHA Rájá, then Rájá of Benares, removed to that City, where they were burnt, and where he appropriated the spot now called the Kabír Chaura to the reception of their ashes, whilst BILÍ KHÁN Patthán, the head of the Mohammedan party, erected a tomb over the other portion at Magar near Gorakhpur, where KABÍR had died. This latter place was endowed by MANSÚR ALÍ KHÁN with several villages, and it divides with the Chaura the pilgrimage of the followers of this sect.

The Kabír Panthis in consequence of their Master having been the reputed disciple of RÁMÁNAND, and of their paying more respect to VISHNU, than the other Members of the Hindu triad, are always included amongst the Vaishnava sects, and maintain with most of them, the Rámávats especially, a friendly intercourse and political alliance: it is no part of their faith, however, to worship any Hindu deity, or to observe any of the rites or ceremonials of the Hindus, whether orthodox or schismatical; such of their members as are living in the world conform outwardly to all the usages of their tribe and caste, and some of them even pretend to worship the usual divinities, although this is considered as going rather farther than is justifiable. Those however who have abandoned the fetters of society, abstain from all the ordinary practices, and address their homage, chiefly in chanting Hymns, exclusively to the invisible KABÍR: they use no Mantra nor fixed form of salutation; they have no peculiar mode of dress, and some of them go nearly naked, without objecting however to clothe themselves in order to appear dressed, where clothing is considered decent or respectful—the Mahants wear a small scull cap: the frontal marks, if worn, are usually those of the Vaishnava sects, or they make a streak with Sandal, or Gopichandan along the ridge of the nose: a necklace and rosary of Tulasi are also worn by them, but all these outward signs are considered of no importance, and the inward man is the only essential point to be attended to¹.

हाँ जी हाँ जी सब से किजिये वसे आपने गाऊं ॥

“Associate and mix with all, and take the names of all; say to every one, yes Sir, yes Sir. Abide in your own abode.”—They do not admit that taking the names of all implies the in-

The doctrines of KABÍR are taught in a great variety of works in different dialects of Hindi; they are the acknowledged compositions of his disciples and successors, but they are mostly in the form of dialogues, and profess to be of his utterance, either in his own words, with the phrase, Kaháhí Kabír, 'Kabír verily says', or to the same substance, which is marked by the qualification, Kahai Kabír, 'Kabír has said', or they are given in the language of his followers, when the expression Dás Kabír, the slave of Kabír, is made use of. The style of all their works is very peculiar, they are written in the usual forms of Hindi verse, the Dohá, Chaupai and Samay; and are very voluminous, as may be inferred from the following collection, preserved as the Kháss Grantha, or The Book at the Chaura.

1. Sukh Nidhán.
2. Gorakhnáth ki Goshthí.
3. Kabír Pánjí.
4. Balakh ki Ramainí.
5. Rámánand ki Goshthí.
6. Ánand Rám Ságara.
7. Śabdávalí, containing 1,000 Śabdas, or short doctrinal expositions.

vocation of the illusory deities of the Hindu Pantheon, but means that they should reply as they are addressed, whether the phrase be Bandagi, Dañḍawat, or Rám Rám: the proper salutation of an inferior to a superior amongst them, if any be particularly proper, is Bandagi Sáhib, Service, Sir: to which the latter replies, Guru Kí Dayá, the mercy of the Lord be upon you.

8. Mangala, 100 short poems, amongst which is the account of KABÍR's discovery as given above.
9. Vaśant, 100 hymns in that Rága.
10. Holí, 200 of the songs called Holí.
11. Rekhtas, 100 odes.
12. Jhúlanas, 500 odes, in a different style.
13. Kaháras, 500 odes, in a different style.
14. Hindolas, 12 ditto ditto. The subject of all these odes, or hymns, is always moral or religious.
15. Bárah Máśa, the 12 months in a religious view, agreeably to KABÍR's system.
16. Chancharas 22.
17. Chautiśas 2: the 34 letters of the Nágari alphabet, with their religious signification.
18. Alefnamáh, the Persian alphabet in the same manner.
19. Ramainis, short doctrinal or argumentative poems.
- Sákhis* 5,000, these may be considered as texts, consisting of one stanza each.
20. The Bijak, in 654 Sections¹.

¹ There are two Bijaks, however, only differing in the occasional omission of some passages and introduction of others; the longer of the two, they say, was communicated by KABÍR himself to the Rájá of Benares. I rather suspect, however, that the varieties are only those common to most Hindu Manuscripts, and that many more than two varieties are to be found. A curious Italian work on the Kabír Panthis, entitled, but not accurately, Mulapanci, intending no doubt Múlapanthí, or Radical disciple, not as rendered, Della Radice, is published in the third volume of the Mines of the East: it was found amongst the papers

There are also a variety of stanzas, called Ágams, Vánis, &c. composing a very formidable course of study to those who wish to go deep into the doctrine of this school, and one in which the greatest proficients amongst the Kabír Panthís are but imperfectly versed. A few Sákhís, Šabdas and Rekhtas, with the greater portion of the Bijak, constituting their acquirements: these, however, they commit to memory, and quote in argument with singular readiness and happiness of application; the Goshtíhs, or disputation of KABÍR with those opposed to him, as GORAKHNÁTH, RÁMÁNAND, and even in spite of chronology with Mohammed himself, are not read till more advanced, whilst the Sukh Nidhán, which is the key to the whole, and which has the singularity of being quite clear and intelligible, is only imparted to those pupils whose studies are considered to approach perfection.

The author or compiler of the Bijak or Vijak, was of the Propaganda, and is communicated by Monsignore MÜNTER, Bishop of Zealand, in Denmark; an eminent Scholar, the author of a valuable work on the Sahidic Version of the N. T. &c. It is to be presumed, that it is intended to be a translation of some Kábirí work, but how correctly it deserves this character, may be questioned; much of the phraseology of the sect is indeed closely followed, but the minute and ridiculous details of its cosmogony are, with very few exceptions, exceedingly different from those notions entertained by the followers of Kabír, as explained in the Bijaks, or Sukh Nidhán. The extract published in the Mines, appears to be a portion, the second book, of some work thus described: "Il libro primario dei Cabiristi (Specie di riforma della gentilità,) si chiama Satnam Kabir: questo libro e fra le carte di Propaganda."

*Bhagodás*¹, one of KABÍR's immediate disciples: it is the great authority amongst the Kabir Panthís in general; it is written in very harmonious verse, and with great ingenuity of illustration: its style, however, is more dogmatical than argumentative, and it rather inveighs against other systems than explains its own: in the latter respect it is, indeed, so inexplicit and obscure, that it is perhaps impossible to derive from it any satisfactory conclusion as to the real doctrines of KABÍR. The followers of the Sect admit this obscurity, and much difference of opinion prevails amongst them in the interpretation of many passages: some of the teachers have a short work professedly written as a key to the most difficult parts, but this is in the hands of a chosen few: it is of no great value, however, as it is little less puzzling than the original, of a few passages of which the following translations will best exemplify the description thus given:

RAMAINÍ THE 1ST.—God, light, sound, and one woman; from these have sprung HARI, BRAHMÁ, and TRIPURÁRI. Innumerable are the emblems of ŚIVA and BHAVÁNÍ, which they have established, but they know not their own beginning nor end: a dwelling has been prepared for them: HARI, BRAHMÁ, and ŚIVA, are the three headmen, and each has his own village: they have formed the Khanás and the egg of Brahmá, and have invented the six Darśanas—and ninety-six Páshańdas: no one has ever read the Vedas in the womb, nor has any infant been born a member of Islám. ‘The woman’, relieved from the burthen of the embryo, adorned her person with every grace. I and you are of one blood, and one life animates us both; from one mother is the world born: what knowledge is this that makes us separate? no one knows the varieties of this descent, and how shall one tongue declare them? nay should the mouth have a million of tongues, it would be incompetent to the task. Kabír has said, I have cried aloud from friendship to mankind; from not knowing the name of RÁMA, the world has been swallowed up in death.

In this Ramainí, the first passage contains an allusion to the notions of the sect regarding the history of creation. God is called ANTAR, Inner, that which was in all, and in which all was, meaning the first self-existent and all-comprehensive being. Jyotish is the luminous element, in which he manifested himself, and Sabda, the primitive sound or word that expressed his essence—the woman is Máyú, or the principle of error and delusion: the next passage relates to the impotence of the secondary gods, and the unnatural character of religious distinctions: “the woman” is MÁYÁ, the self-born daughter of the first deity, and at once the mother and wife of BRAHMÁ, VISHNU, and SIVA. “I and you, &c.” is addressed by her to them, “no one knows, &c.” is an allusion to the blindness of all worldly wisdom, and the passage winds up with a word of advice, recommending the worship of RÁMA, implying the true God, agreeably to the system of KABÍR.

The style of the whole Bijak is of this kind: straggling allusions to the deceits of Májú, to the errors of other sects, and the superiority of their own, being strung together with very little method: it will not, however, be necessary to analyse any more of the passages, and they will become clear by reference to the general view of the system, with which we shall be furnished from the Sukh Nidhán: it may be sufficient here to observe, that the doctrines of Kabír are said to be conveyed in four-fold language, or that of Máyá, Átmá, Man or intellect, and the Vedas.

RAMAINI THE 6TH.—(Máyá's account of the first being, and of herself.) What is his colour, form, and shape; what other person has beheld him; the Omkára did not witness his beginning, how then can I explain it; can you say from what root he sprang; he is neither the stars, nor sun, nor moon; he has neither father, nor mother; he is neither water, nor earth, nor fire, nor air; what name or description can I give of him; to him is neither day nor night, nor family nor caste; he resides on the summit of space; a spark of his substance was once manifest, of which emanation I was the bride; the bride of that being who needs no other.

SABDA THE 56TH.—To ALÍ and RÁMA we owe our existence, and should, therefore, shew similar tenderness to all that live: of what avail is it to shave your head, prostrate yourself on the ground, or immerse your body in the stream; whilst you shed blood you call yourself pure, and boast of virtues that you never display: of what benefit is cleaning your mouth, counting your beads, performing ablution, and bowing yourself in temples, when, whilst you mutter your prayers, or journey to Mecca and Medina, deceitfulness is in your heart. The Hindu fasts every eleventh day, the Musalman during the Ramazán. Who formed the remaining months and days that you should venerate but one. If the Creator dwell in Tabernacles, whose residence is the universe? who has beheld Ráma seated amongst images, or found him at the shrine to which the Pilgrim has directed his steps? The city of HARA is to the east, that of ALÍ to the west; but explore your own heart, for there are both Ráma and Karím. Who talks of the lies of the Veds and Tébs; those who understand not their essence. Behold but one in all things, it is the second that leads you astray. Every man and woman that has ever been born is of the same nature with yourself. He, whose is the world, and whose are the children of Ali and Rám, He is my Guru, He is my Pir.

The following Śabda is peculiarly illustrative of the mystical and unintelligible style of parts of the Bijak; the explanation of the terms is taken from the key above referred to, but the interpreter is, perhaps, the most unintelligible of the two.

ŚABDA THE 69TH.—Who is the (1) magistrate of this city, (2) the meat (3) is exposed, and the (4) Vulture sits guarding it, the (5) Rat is converted into a (6) boat, and the (7) Cat is in charge of the helm; the (8) Frog is asleep, and the (9) Snake stands sentinel; the (10) Ox bears; the (11) Cow is barren; and the (12) Heifer is milked thrice a day; the (13) Rhinoceros is attacked by the (14) Jackal; very few know the (15) station of Kabir. (16)

KEY. 1. Man the pride of intellect. 2. The body. 3. The Vedas, or scriptural writings of any sect, which teach the true nature of God. 4. The Pandit, or worldly expounder of divine truths. 5. Man or intellect. 6. A mere vehicle for the diffusion of 7. Máyá, illusion and falsehood. 8. The Siddha or saint. 9. Parameśvara, the supreme being. 10. Vishnu. 11. Máyá or Devi. 12. Parameśvara, the supreme. 13. A holy man. 14. Intellectual or doctrinal pride. 15. The divine nature. 16. God identified with man and nature.

The Sákhis of Kabir deserve, perhaps, a more copious exemplification: they are very gradually current even amongst those not his followers, they contain much curious matter, and they have often been referred to without their character being duly understood; there are some thousands of them, of which the Bijak comprehends between three and four hundred:

one hundred will be sufficient, as a specimen of the whole: they are taken with one or two exceptions, from the Bíjak of the Kabír Chaura, in the order in which they occur.

Sákhís.

1. When man springs from the womb, he is void of every care: pass but the sixth day, and he feels the pains of separation.
2. My word is of the word; hear it, go not astray; if man wishes to know the truth, let him investigate the word.
3. My word is from the first; the word has been deposited in life; a basket has been provided for the flowers; the horse has eaten up the Ghi.
4. My word is from the first; meditate on it every moment; you will flourish in the end like the Joár plant, which shews externally but beards and leaves.
5. Without hearing the word, it is utter darkness; say, whither shall any one go; without finding the gate-way of the word, man will ever be astray.
6. There are many words, but take the pith of them; he who takes not the essence, saith KABÍR, will live a profitless life.
7. For the sake of the word, some have died, and some have resigned dominion: he who has investigated the word, has done his work.
8. Lay in your provender, and provide your carriage, for if your food fail, and your feet be weary, your life is in the hands of another.
9. Lay in provender sufficient for the road, whilst time yet serves: evening comes on; the day is flown, and nothing will be provided.
10. Now is the time to prepare, henceforth the path is difficult: the travellers all hasten to purchase where there is neither trade nor market.
11. He who knows what life is will take the essence of his own; such as it is now, he will not possess it a second time.
12. If you know how mankind pass their lives, you will live according to your knowledge; fetch water for your own drinking, nor demand it from others and drink.

13. Why go about to offer water? there is abundance in every house: when man is really thirsty, he needs no solicitation, but will drink by force.

14. The goose (the world or life) sells pearls; a gold vessel is full of them; but with him who knows not their value, what can be done?

15. The goose abandons the lake, the body is withered and dry: Kabir has called aloud, here is a path, there is a resting place!

16. The goose abandons the lake, and lodges in a water jar. Kabir calls aloud, repair to your village, nor demolish your habitation.

17. The goose and the paddy-bird are of one colour, and frolic in the same pool: the goose extracts the milk from the water, and the paddy-bird drinks the mire.

18. Why comes the feeble doe to the green pool; numerous foes lie in wait for her; how should she escape?

19. The three worlds form a cage; vice and virtue spread a net; life is the prey; and time the fowler.

20. The half of a Sákhî is sufficiently arduous, if duly investigated; of what avail are the books of the Pándit, or incessant study?

21. Having combined the five elements, I found one offspring; now I ask the Pándit, whether life or the word be the greater.

22. Of the five elements, the body was formed: when the body was formed what was done? subservient to action, it is called life, but by action life is destroyed.

23. The offspring of the five elements is called Man; if one element be withdrawn, the whole compound is destroyed.

24. With the five elements is the abode of a great mystery; when the body is decomposed, has any one found it? the word of the teacher is the guide.

25. Colour proceeds from colour, yet behold all are but one: of what colour then is life? think well of this.

26. Life is wakefulness: the word is like Borax, white: who has seen the yellow drop, saith Kabir, that has turned the water of that colour?

27. There is a mirror in the heart; but the face is not visible in it: then only will the face be reflected there, when doubleness of heart shall disappear.

28. The dwelling of Kabir is on the peak of a mountain, and a narrow path leads to it, an ant cannot put its foot upon it, but the pious man may drive up an ox.

29. The blind man talks of a district, which he has not seen; they are possessed of a salt pit, and offer camphor for sale.

30. The road that SANAKA and his brethren, that BRAHMĀ, VISHNU, and MAHESĀ have travelled, is still traversed by mankind: what advice can I bestow?

31. The plough ascends the hill; the horse stops in the village: the bee seeks for honey, where there are no flowers: declare the name of the plant.

32. Sandal! restrain thy fragrance: on thy account, the wood is cut down; the living slay the living, and regard only the dead.

33. The sandal (the soul) is guarded by serpents (passion); what can it effect? every hair is impregnated with venom; where shall Ambrosia enter?

34. The seizer (death) lets not go his hold; though his tongue and beak be scorched: where it deems a dainty, the Chakor devours the burning coals.

35. The Chakor (hill partridge) in its passion for the moon, digests the burning coal, KABIR declares it does not burn him, such is the fervour of his affection.

36. The village is on the top of a mountain, and so is the abode of the stout man. Choose, Kabir, one for your protector, who can really give you an asylum.

37. The crowd has taken the road travelled by the Pandit: Kabir has ascended the steep defile, where lies the abode of RĀM.

38. What, ho! Kabir, descend, together with your car and provender; your provender will fail, your feet will grow weary, and your life will be in the hands of another.

39. From the contest of swinging and being swung no one has escaped. GORAKH (the founder of the Jogis) was stopped at the city of time; who shall be called exempt?

40. GORAKH, enamoured as he was of RĀMA, is dead; his body was not burnt: (the Jogis bury the dead,) the flesh has decayed, and is turned to clay, and such rank as the Kauravas enjoy does he obtain (bodily annihilation).

41. The young camel flying from the wood has fallen into the stream; how shall the animal proclaim its misfortune, who shall learn it?

42. After a search of many days an empty shrine is raised: the camel's calf has strayed into a pit, and repents its heedlessness, when assistance is far off.

43. KABIR (mankind) hat not escaped error, he is seized in various forms: without knowledge of its lord the heart will be but ashes.

44. Although not subject to fine, a heavy fine has been imposed upon the world: it has proved unprofitable: avarice has disposed of it; the juice of the cane yields both clayed and candied sugar.

45. In the confines of the Malaya Mountain (where Sandal grows) 'the Palás (Butea) tree acquires fragrance; were the Bamboo to grow there for ages, it would never gain perfume.

46. In the Woods of the Malaya Mountain grow trees of every kind, they may be called Sandal, but they yield not the Sandal of Malaya.

47. Walking, walking still, the feet are weary; the city is yet far off, a tent is erected by the road side; say, who is to blame?

48. The end of the journey is sunset, but night comes on mid-way: it is from the embrace of many lovers that the wanton is barren.

49. Man (the pride of intellect) enquires, when may I be allowed to go? the heart asks, when shall I go? the village (truth) that I have been these six months in quest of (investigating the six Darsanas, or systems), is not half a mile remote.

50. He has left his dwelling as an Ascetic, and goes to the thickets to practice penance: tired of the Pán-box, he beats the betel-vender, and eats split pease.

51. When a man (intending, however, here a Jogi) becomes acquainted with the name of RÁM, his body becomes a mere skeleton; his eyes taste no repose; his limbs retain no flesh.

52. He who sows RÁM, never puts forth the buds of wrath: he attaches no value to the valueless; he knows neither pleasure nor pain.

53. The cut mango will not blossom, the slit ear cannot be reunited; whose loss is it, if they apply not the philosopher's stone, that GORAKH had?

54. They have not regarded good advice, but have determined for themselves. Kabir says and cries aloud, the world has passed away like a dream.

55. When fire (evil) burns amidst the ocean (the world), no one sees the smoke: he is conscious of the fire who lighted it, and he who perishes in the flame.

56. The incendiary orders the fire to be kindled, and he who lights it singes his wings: he expiates his own act: the thatch escapes, but the house is burned.

57. When fire (truth) burns in the ocean (the mind), as it burns, it clears away the rubbish (worldly care). Pándits from the east and from the west have died in the discussion.

58. When fire blazes in the ocean, the thatch of the house falls to pieces. Mankind weep as they resign their breath, and the inestimable jewel is lost.

59. That a drop falls into the ocean, all can perceive; but that the drop and the ocean are but one, few can comprehend.

60. The poison still remains in the soil, although the latter has been a hundred times sprinkled with ambrosia—man quits not the evil practices to which he has been long addicted.

61. The bellows is applied to the damp wood, which calls aloud with pain: if again it is caught in the blacksmith's forge, it will be burned the second time.

62. The soul that pines in absence, vainly flies to medicaments for relief; sigh follows sigh; it faints repeatedly and recovers, to exist, restless and distressed.

63. The separated (spirit) is like the moist fuel which smokes and blazes by fits: then only will it be exempted from pain, when all is utterly consumed.

64. An invitation has been issued in metre, and no one has understood the stanza; fortunate is the scholar who comprehends the word.

65. Take the true word of Kabir to your heart; the mind has received, but not understood it, although it has been divulged throughout the four ages.

66. If you are a true dealer, open the market of veracity; keep clean your inward man, and repel oppression to a distance.

67. The house is of wood, fire is all around it; the Pandit with his learning is burnt: the prudent man makes his escape.

68. Drops fall from heaven on the verdure of Sráváni: all the world are Vaishnávas, no one listens to the teacher.

69. The bather dives nor comes up again; I think within myself, should sleep surprise him in the stream of fascination, what will befall him?

70. The Sákhî (text) is uttered, but not obeyed; the road is pointed out, but not followed: the stream of fascination sweeps him away; he finds no place to put his feet.

71. Many there are that talk, but few that take care to be found: let him pass on without regard, who practices not what he professes.

72. One by one, let each be considered, and adhered to, so shall error be stopped: he who is double-faced like a drum, shall be slapped (like a drum) on both cheeks.

73. He who has no check upon his tongue, has no truth in his heart; keep him not company: he will kill you on the high way.

74. Life has been destroyed by the repeated falsehoods of the tongue; it has strayed on the path of pride, and been whirled in the swing of time.

75. Put a check upon the tongue; speak not much; associate with the wise; investigate the words of the teacher.

76. The body is wounded by a spear, the head is broken off, and left in the flesh; it cannot be extracted without the load-stone: a thousand other stones are of no avail.

77. At first the ascent is difficult, but afterwards the way is easy; the beauty is behind the curtain, far from the pregnant woman.

78. Worldly existence is the season for reflecting what is the Yoga: the season is passing away; think ye, who have understanding.

79. Doubt has overcome the world, and no one has triumphed over doubt: he will refute doubt, who has investigated the word.

80. The eyes see dimly from incessant babbling, KABIR cries aloud, and says, understand the word that is spoken.

81. Life is the philosopher's stone, the world is of iron: Pársi (Máya) comes from Páras (God), the mintage is of the former.

82. Affection is the garment in which man dresses for the dance: consign yourself hand and foot to him, whose body and soul are truth.

83. In the concavity of the mirror the image is formed: the dog seeing his likeness barks at it till he dies.

84. But as a man viewing his reflexion in a mirror, knows that it and the original are but one, so should he know that this element, is but that element, and that thus the world proceeds.

85. KABIR cries aloud to his fellows: ascend the sandal ridge; whether there be a road prepared or not; what matters it to me?

86. Truth, provided there be truth in the heart, is the best of all; there can be no happiness without truth, let man do as he will.

87. Let truth be your rate of interest, and fix it in your heart; a real diamond should be purchased, the mock gem is waste of capital.

88. Truth is the best of all, if it be known for truth—when truth combines with truth, then a real union is effected.

89. No act of devotion can equal truth; no crime is so heinous as falsehood; in the heart where truth abides, there is my abode.

90. The net of error catches the heron; the simpleton falls into the snare: KABIR declares, that he will escape the toils, who has discrimination in his heart.

91. Like the harlot companion of the minstrel is life (Jiv), associated with intellect (man), at his command, she dances various steps, and is never separated from him.

92. This pride of intellect is manifold; now a swindler, now a thief; now a liar, now a murderer; men, sages, gods, have run after it in vain; its mansion has a hundred gates.

93. The snake of separation has attached itself to the body, and darted its fangs into the heart: into the body of the Sádh it finds no admission: prepare yourself for what may happen.

94. How is it possible to reach the city when the guide cannot point out the road? when the boat is crazy, how shall the passengers get clear of the Ghát?

95. When the master is blind, what is to become of the scholar? when the blind leads the blind, both will fall into the well.

96. Yet the master is helpless when the scholar is unapt: it is blowing through a bambu, to teach wisdom to the dull.

97. The instruction of the foolish is waste of knowledge; a maund of soap cannot wash charcoal white.

98. The tree bears not fruit for itself, nor for itself does the stream collect its waters: for the benefit of others alone does the sage assume a bodily shape.

99. I have wept for mankind, but no one has wept with me; he will join in my tears, who comprehends the word.

100. All have exclaimed, master, master, but to me this doubt arises: how can they sit down with the master, whom they do not know?

The preceding will serve as exemplifications of the compositions of this school: they are necessarily unsatisfactory, as amongst some hundreds of similar passages the business of selection, when confined to the few admissible in this place, is unavoidably perplexing and incomplete: they are, however, sufficient for the present purpose, as the perusal of the entire work from which they have been selected would not convey any more positive notions of the doctrines of Kabír: these we shall now proceed to state according to the authority of the Sukh Nidhán.

The Sukh Nidhán is supposed to be addressed by Kabír himself to Dharmadás, his chief pupil, and a follower of Rámánand's doctrines; it is said to be the work of ŚRUTGOPÁL, the first of KABÍR's disciples.

From this authority it appears, that, although the Kabír Panthis have withdrawn, in such a very essential point as worship, from the Hindu communion, they still preserve abundant vestiges of their primitive source; and that their notions are in substance the same as those of the Pauránic sects, especially of the Vaishnava division. They admit of but one God, the creator of the world, and in opposition to the Vedánta notions of the absence of every quality and form, they assert that he has a body formed of the five elements of matter, and that he has mind endowed with the three Guñas, or qualities of being; of course of ineffable purity and irresistible power: he is free from the defects of human natures, and can assume what particular shape he will: in all other respects he does not differ from man, and the pure man, the Sádh of the Kabír sect, is his living resemblance, and after death is his associate and equal; he is eternal, without end or beginning, as in fact is the elementary matter of which he consists, and of which all things are made residing in him before they took their present form, as the parts of the tree abide in the seed, or flesh, blood and bone may be considered to be present in the seminal fluid: from the latter circumstance, and the identity of their essential nature, proceeds the doctrine, that God and man are not only the same, but that they are both in the same manner every thing that lives and moves and has its being. Other sects have adopted these phrases literally, but the followers of Kabir do not mean by them to deny the individuality of being, and only intend these texts as assertions of all nature originally participating in common elementary principles.

The Paramapurusha was alone for seventy-two ages, for after the Paurániks the Kabir Panthis maintain successive and endless creations: he then felt a desire to renew the world, which desire became manifest in a female form¹, being the Máyá, from whom all the mistaken notions current amongst mankind originate: with this female the Ádi Bhaváni Prakrítí or Śakti, the Parama Purusha, or first male, co-habits, and begets the Hindu triad, Brahmá, Vishnú and Śiva: he then disappears, and the lady makes advances to her own sons: to their questions of her origin and character, she tells them, she was the bride of the first great invisible being, without shape and void, and whom she describes agreeably to the Vedánta notions; that she is now at liberty, and being of the same nature as themselves, is a fit associate for them: the deities hesitate, and Vishnú especially, putting some rather puzzling queries to Máyá, secured the respect of the Kabir Panthis, and excited the wrath of the goddess: she appears as Mahá Mágá, or Durgá, and frightens her sons into a forgetfulness of their real character, assent to her doctrines, and compliance with her desires: the result of this is the birth of Saraswati, Lakshmi and Umá, whom she weds to the three deities, and then establishing herself at Jwálamukhí, leaves the three wedded pairs to frame the universe, and give currency to the different errors of practice and belief which they have learnt from her.

If is to the falsehood of Mágá and her criminal conduct that the Kabír Panthis perpetually allude in their works, and in consequence of the deities pinning their faith upon her sleeve, that they refuse them any sort of reverential homage: the essence of all religion is to know Kabír in his real form, a knowledge which those deities and their worshippers, as well as the followers of Mohammed, are all equally strange to, although the object of their religion, and of all religions, is the same.

Life is the same in all beings, and when free from the vices and defects of humanity, assumes any material form it pleases: as long as it is ignorant of its source and parent, however, it is doomed to transmigration through various forms, and amongst others we have a new class of them, for it animates the planetary bodies, undergoing a fresh transfer, it is supposed, whenever a star or meteor falls: as to heaven and hell, they are the inventions of Mágá, and are therefore both imaginary, except that the Swarga of the Hindus, and Bihisht of the Musalmans, imply worldly luxury and sensual enjoyment, whilst the Narak and Jehannam are those cares and pains which make a hell upon earth.

The moral code of the Kabir Panthis is short, but if observed faithfully is of a rather favourable tendency. Life is the gift of God, and must not therefore be violated by his creatures; Humanity is, consequently, a cardinal virtue, and the shedding of blood, whether of man or animal, a heinous crime. Truth is the other great principle of their code, as all the ills of the world, and ignorance of God, are attributable to original falsehood. Retirement from the world is desirable, because the passions and desires, the hopes and fears which the social state engenders, are all hostile to tranquillity and purity of spirit, and prevent that undisturbed meditation on man and God which is necessary to their comprehension. The last great point is the usual sum and substance of every sect amongst the Hindus¹, implicit devotion in word, act, and thought to the Guru, or spiritual guide: in this, however, the characteristic spirit of the Kabir Panthis appears, and the pupil is enjoined to scrutinize his teacher's doctrines and acts, to be first satisfied that he is the sage he pretends to be, before he resigns

आचार्यं मां विजानीयान्नावमन्येत कर्हिचित् ।
न मर्त्यबुद्धासूयेत सर्वदेवमयो गुरुः ॥

NÁBHÁJI declares the Deity, Guru, worshipper, and worship, to be four names and one substance:

भक्तिभक्तिभगवंतगुरु चतुर्णाम वपु एक ॥

himself to his control. This sect, indeed, is remarkably liberal in this respect, and the most frequently recurring texts of Kabír are those which enforce an attentive examination of the doctrine, that he offers to his disciples. The chief of each community has absolute authority over his dependents: the only punishments he can award, however, are moral, not physical—irregular conduct is visited by reproof and admonition: if the offender does not reform, the Guru refuses to receive his salutation; if still incurable, the only further infliction is expulsion from the fraternity.

The doctrine of outward conformity, and the absence of visible objects of worship have prevented this sect from spreading very generally throughout India: it is, however, very widely diffused, and, as I have observed, has given rise to many others, that have borrowed its phraseology, and caught a considerable portion of its spirit: the sect itself is split into a variety of subdivisions, and there are no fewer than twelve branches of it traced up to the founder, between which a difference of opinion as well as descent prevails: the founders of these twelve branches, and the position of their descendants, are the following:—

2. Bhago Dás, the author of the Bíjak: his successors reside at Dhanauti.
3. Náráyań Dás, and

4. Churámań Dás; these two were the sons of Dharma Dás, a merchant of the Kasaundhya tribe, of the Śrī Vaishnava sect, and one of Kabír's first and most important converts; his residence was at Bandho near Jabbalpur, where the Maths of his posterity long remained: the Mahants were family men, thence termed Vans Gurus: the line of Náráyań Dás is extinct, and the present successor of Churámań, being the son of a concubine, is not acknowledged as a Mahant by all the other branches.

5. Jaggo Dás; the Gaddí or Pillow at Cuttack.

6. Jívan Dás, the founder of the Satrámí sect, to whom we shall again have occasion to advert.

7. Kamál.—Bombay: the followers of this teacher practice the Yoga. Kamál himself is said to have been the son of Kabír, but the only authority for this is a popular and proverbial phrase¹.

8. Ták Sáli.—Baroda.

9. Jnáni.—Majjhni near Sahásram.

10. Sáheb Dás.—Cuttack: his followers have also some distinct notions, and form a sect called Múla Panthís.

11. Nityánand.

12. Kamál Nád: these two settled somewhere in the Dekhan, but my informant could not tell me exactly where. There are also some popular, and perhaps local, distinctions of the sect, as Hansa Kabiris, Dána Kabiris, and Mangrela Kabiris, but in what respect, except appellation, they differ from the rest has not been ascertained.

Of these establishments the Kabir Chaura, at Benares, is pre-eminent in dignity, and it is constantly visited by wandering members of the sect, as well as by those of other kindred heresies: its Mahant receives and feeds these visitors whilst they stay, although the establishment has little to depend upon, except the occasional donations of its lay friends and followers. BALVANT SINH, and his successor, CHEIT SINH, were great patrons of it, and the latter granted to the Chaura a fixed monthly allowance. CHEIT SINH also attempted to form some estimate of the numbers of the sect, and if we may credit the result, they must be very considerable indeed, as at a grand meeting, or Melá, which he instituted near Benares, no fewer than 35,000 Kabir Panthis of the Monastic and Mendicant class are said to have been collected. There is no doubt that the Kabir Panthis, both clerical and lay, are very numerous in all the provinces of upper and central India, except, perhaps, in Bengal itself: the quaker-like spirit of the sect, their abhorrence of all violence, their regard for truth, and the inobtrusiveness of their opinions, render them very inoffensive members of the state: their mendicants also never solicit alms, and in this capacity even they are less obnoxious than the many religious vagrants, whom the rank soil of Hindu superstition and the enervating operation of an Indian climate so plentifully engender.

KHÁKÍS.

This division of the Vaishn̄avas is generally derived, though not immediately, from RÁMÁNAND, and is undoubtedly connected in its polity, and practice, with his peculiar followers. The reputed founder is Kíl, the disciple of KRISHNADÁS, whom some accounts make the disciple of ÁSÁNAND, the disciple of RÁMÁNAND, but the history of the Kháki sect is not well known, and it seems to be of modern origin, as no notice of it occurs in the Bhakta Málá, or in any other work that has been consulted: the sectaries, though believed to be rather numerous, appear to be either confined to a few particular districts, or to lead wholly an erratic life, in which latter character they are confounded with the class of Vairágis: as no written accounts have been procured, and the opportunities of obtaining oral information have been rare and imperfect, a very brief notice of this sect is all that can here be offered.

The Khákis, as the name implies, are distinguished from the other Vaishn̄avas, by the application of clay and ashes to their dress or persons: those who reside in fixed establishments generally dress like other Vaishn̄avas, but those who lead a wandering life go either naked or nearly so, smearing their bodies with the pale grey mixture of ashes and earth, and making, in this state, an appearance very incompatible with the mild and decent character of the Vaishnava sects: the Khákis also frequently wear the Jatá, or braided hair, after the fashion of the votaries of Síva, and, in fact, it appears that this sect affords one of the many instances of the imitative spirit common amongst the Hindu polytheists, and has adopted, from the Sáivás, some of their characteristic practices, blending them with the preferential adoration of VISHNÚ, as Raghunáth or Ráma: the Khákis also worship Sírá, and pay particular veneration to HANUMÁN.

Many Khákis are established about Furúkhábád, but their principal seat on this side of India is at Hanumán Garh, near Ayodhyá, in Oude: the Samádh or spiritual throne of the founder, is said to be at Jaypur: the term Samádh applied to it, however, would seem to indicate their adopting a like practice with the Jogis, that of burying their dead, as the word is more generally used to express a tomb or mausoleum¹.

MALÚK DÁSÍS.

The Malúk Dásís form another subdivision of the Rámánandi Vaishnávas, of comparatively uncertain origin and limited importance: they are generally traced from Rámánand in this manner: 1. Rámánand, 2. Áśánand, 3. Krishna Dás, 4. Kil, 5. Malúk Dás; making the last, consequently, contemporary with the author of the Bhakta Málá, and placing him in the reign of AKBAR, or about 250 years ago.

We had occasion, in the notice taken of NÁBHÁJÍ, to shew that the spiritual genealogy now enumerated could scarcely be correct, for as RÁMÁNAND must have flourished prior to the year 1400, we have but three generations between him and the date even of AKBAR's succession 1555, or a century and a half: it was then mentioned, however, that according to the Bhakta Málá, Krishna Dás was not the pupil of Áśánand, and consequently the date of succession was not necessarily uninterrupted: we might therefore place MALÚK DÁS, where there is reason to place NÁBHÁJÍ, about the end of AKBAR's reign, as far as this genealogy is to be depended upon, but there is reason to question even its accuracy, and to bring down MALÚK DÁS to a comparatively recent period: the uniform belief of his followers is indeed sufficient testimony on this head, and they are invariably agreed in making him contemporary with AURENGZEB.

The modifications of the Vaishnava doctrines introduced by MALÚK DÁS, appear to have been little more than the name of the teacher, and a shorter streak of red upon the forehead: in one respect indeed there is an important distinction between these and the Rámánandi ascetics, and the teachers of the Malúk Dásis appear to be of the secular order, Grihasthas, or house-holders, whilst the others are all coenobites: the doctrines, however, are essentially the same: Vishnú, as Rámá, is the object of their practical adoration, and their principles partake of the spirit of quietism, which pervades these sects: their chief authority is the Bhagavad Gítá, and they read some small Sanskrit tracts, containing the praise of Rámá: they have also some Hindi Sákhis, and Vishnú Padas attributed to their founder, as also a work in the same language, entitled the Daśratan: the followers of this sect are said to be numerous in particular districts, especially amongst the trading and servile classes, to the former of which the founder belonged¹.

The principal establishment of the Malúk Dásis is at Kara Manikpur, the birth-place of the founder, and still occupied by his descendants²; the present Mahant

अजगर करे न चाकरी पंछी करे न काम ।
दास मलूका यों कहे सब का दाता राम ॥

“The snake performs no service, the bird discharges no duty. MALÚK DÁS declares, Rám is the giver of all.” [Roebuck’s Proverbs, II, 1, 36.]

² There is some variety in the accounts here, MATHURÁ NÁTH says, the Tomb is at Kara; Purán Dás asserts, that it is at

is the eighth in descent from him: the series is thus enumerated:

1. MALÚK DÁS.
2. RÁMSANÁHI.
3. KRÍSHNÁSNÁHI.
4. THÁKUR DÁS.
5. GOPÁL DÁS.
6. KUNJ BEHÁRI.
7. RÁMSÁHÚ.
8. SEOPRASÁD DÁS.
9. GANGÁ PRASÁD DÁS, the present Mahant.

The Math at Kara is situated near the river, and comprises the dwellings of the Mahant, and at the time it was visited, of fifteen resident Chelás, or disciples, accommodations for numerous religious mendicants who come hither in pilgrimage, and a temple dedicated to Rámachandra: the Gaddí, or pillow of the sect, is here, and the actual pillow originally used by MALÚK DÁS is said to be still preserved. Besides this establishment, there are six other Maths belonging to this sect, at Alláhábád, Benares, Bríndávan, Ayodhyá, Lucknow, which is modern, having been founded by Gomati Dás, under the patronage of Asef ad Daula, and Jagannáth, which last is of great repute as rendered sacred by the death of MALÚK DÁS.

Jagannáth, and the birth-place at Kara—he has been at both: the establishment at Jagannáth is of great repute; it is near to a Math of KABÍR PANTHÍS, and all ascetics who go to this place of pilgrimage consider it essential to receive the Malúk Dás ká Tukrá, from the one, and Kabír ká Taraní, from the other, or a piece of bread and spoonful of sour rice water. This and most of the other particulars were procured for me from the present Mahant by a young officer, Lieut. WILTON, stationed for a short time at Kara.

DÁDÚ PANTHÍS.

This class is one of the indirect ramifications of the Rámánandí stock, and is always included amongst the Vaishnava schisms: its founder is said to have been a pupil of one of the Kabír Panthí teachers, and to be the fifth in descent from RÁMÁNAND, according to the following genealogy:—

1. Kabír.	4. Vimal.
2. Kamál.	5. Buddhan.
3. Jamál.	6. Dádú.

The worship is addressed to Ráma, but it is restricted to the Japa, or repetition of his name, and the Ráma intended is the deity, as negatively described in the Vedánta theology: temples and images are prohibited.

Dádú was a cotton cleaner by profession: he was born at Ahmedábád, but in his twelfth year removed to Sambhur, in Ajmír: he thence travelled to Kalyánpur, and next removed to Naraina, in his thirty-seventh year, a place four cos from Sambhur, and twenty from Jaypur. When here, he was admonished, by a voice from heaven, to addiet himself to a religious life, and he accordingly retired to Baheraña mountain, five cos from Naraina, where, after some time, he disappeared, and no traces of him could be found. His followers believe he was absorbed into the deity. If the list of his religious descent be accurate, he flourished about the year 1600, at the end of Akbar's reign, or in the beginning of that of Jehángír. The followers of Dádú wear no peculiar frontal mark nor Málá, but carry a rosary, and are further distinguished by a peculiar sort of cap, a round white cap, according to some, but according to others, one with four corners, and a flap hanging down behind; which it is essential that each man should manufacture for himself.

The Dádú Panthis are of three classes: the Virāktas, who are religious characters, who go bare-headed, and have but one garment and one water-pot. The Nágas, who carry arms, which they are willing to exercise for hire, and, amongst the Hindu princes, they have been considered as good soldiers. The third class is that of the Vistar Dháris, who follow the occupations of ordinary life. A further sub-division exists in this sect, and the chief branches again form fifty-two divisions, or Thambas, the peculiarities of which have not been ascertained. The Dádú Panthis burn their dead at dawn, but their religious members not unfrequently enjoin, that their bodies, after death, shall be thrown into some field, or some wilderness, to be devoured by the beasts and birds of prey, as they say that in a funeral pile insect life is apt to be destroyed.

The Dádú Panthis are said to be very numerous in Márwár and Ajmír: of the Nága class alone the Rájá of Jaypur is reported to entertain as soldiers more than ten thousand: the chief place of worship is at Naraina, where the bed of Dádú, and the collection of the texts of the sect are preserved and worshipped: a small building on the hill marks the place of his disappearance—a Melá, or fair, is held annually, from the day of new moon to that of full moon in Phalgun (Febr.-March) at Naraina. The tenets of the sect are contained in several Bháshá works, in which it is said a vast number of passages from the Kabír writings are inserted, and the general character of which is certainly of a similar nature¹. The Dádú Panthí maintain a friendly intercourse with the followers of Kabír, and are frequent visitors at the Chaura.

[To supply the deficiency alluded to in the note, we reprint from the 6th volume of the Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal pp. 484–87, and 750–56, the translation, by Captain G. R. Siddons, of two chapters from one of the granths or manuals of the Dádúpanthí. The translator gives (p. 750) the following particulars respecting his visit to one of their Maths:

“When not interested in the subject, I chanced to visit one of the Dádúpanthí institutions at a village near Sambhur, and was particularly struck by the contented and severe countenances of the sectaries. There were a Principal and several Professors, which gave the place the appearance of a College. The former occupied a room at the top of the building, and seened quite absorbed in meditation.—The sect is maintained by the admission to it of proselytes, and marriage is, I believe, forbidden; as also the growing any hair about the face, which gives to the priests the appearance of old women.”

The Chapter on Faith,—विश्वास का अनुवाद.

1. Whatever Rām willeth, that, without the least difficulty, shall be; why, therefore, do ye kill yourselves with grief, when grief can avail you nothing?
2. Whatsoever hath been made, God made. Whatsoever is to be made, God will make. Whatsoever is, God maketh,—then why do any of ye afflict yourselves?
3. Dādū sayeth, Thou, oh God! art the author of all things which have been made, and from thee will originate all things, which are to be made. Thou art the maker, and the cause of all things made. There is none other but thee.
4. He is my God, who maketh all things perfect. Meditate upon him in whose hands are life and death.
5. He is my God, who created heaven, earth, hell, and the intermediate space; who is the beginning and end of all creation; and who provideth for all.
6. I believe that God made man, and that he maketh every thing. He is my friend.
7. Let faith in God characterize all your thoughts, words, and actions. He who serveth God, places confidence in nothing else.
8. If the remembrance of God be in your hearts, ye will be able to accomplish things which are impracticable. But those who seek the paths of God are few!
9. He who understandeth how to render his calling sinless, shall be happy in that calling, provided he be with God.
10. If he that perfecteth mankind occupy a place in your hearts, you will experience his happiness inwardly. Rām is in every thing; Rām is eternal.
11. Oh foolish one! God is not far from you. He is near you. You are ignorant, but he knoweth every thing, and is careful in bestowing.
12. Consideration and power belong to God, who is omniscient. Strive to preserve God, and give heed to nothing else.
13. Care can avail nothing; it devoureth life; for those things shall happen which God shall direct.
14. He who causeth the production of all living things, giveth to their mouths milk, whilst yet in the stomach. They are placed amidst the fires of the belly: nevertheless they remain unscorched.

15. Oh, forget not, my brother, that God's power is always with you. There is a formidable pass within you, and crowds of evil passions flock to it: therefore comprehend God.

16. Commend the qualities which God possesseth. He gave you eyes, speech, head, feet, mouth, ears, and hands. He is the lord of life and of the world.

17. Ye forget God, who was indefatigable in forming every thing, and who keepeth every thing in order; ye destroy his doctrines. Remember God, for he endued your body with life: remember that beloved one, who placed you in the womb, reared and nourished you.

18. Preserve God in your hearts, and put faith into your minds, so that by God's power your expectations may be realized.

19. He taketh food and employment, and distributeth them. God is near; he is always with me.

20. In order that he may diffuse happiness, God becometh subservient to all; and although the knowledge of this is in the hearts of the foolish, yet will they not praise his name.

21. Although the people every where stretch out their hands to God; although his power is so extensive, yet is he sometimes subservient to all.

22. Oh God, thou art as it were exceeding riches; thy regulations are without compare, thou art the chief of every world, yet remainest invisible.

23. DÁDÚ sayeth, I will become the sacrifice of the Godhead; of him who supporteth every thing; of him who is able, in one moment, to rear every description of animal, from a worm even to an elephant.

24. Take such food and raiment as it may please God to provide you with. You require naught besides.

25. Those men who are contented, eat of the morsel which is from ~~the~~ God. Oh disciple! why do you wish for other food, which resembles carrion?

26. He that partaketh of but one grain of the love of God, shall be released from the sinfulness of all his doubts and actions.

Who need cook, or who need grind? Wherever ye cast your eyes, ye may see provisions.

27. Meditate on the nature of your bodies, which resemble earthen vessels; and put every thing away from them, which is not allied to God.

28. DÁDÚ sayeth, I take for my spiritual food, the water and the leaf of RÁM. For the world I care not, but God's love is unfathomable.

29. Whatever is the will of God, will assuredly happen; therefore do not destroy yourselves by anxiety, but listen.

30. What hope can those have elsewhere, even if they wandered over the whole earth, who abandon God? oh foolish one! righteous men who have meditated on this subject, advise you to abandon all things but God, since all other things are affliction.

31. It will be impossible for you to profit any thing, if you are not with God, even if you were to wander from country to country; therefore, oh ignorant, abandon all other things, for they are affliction, and listen to the voice of the holy.

32. Accept with patience the offering of truth, believing it to be true; fix your heart on God, and be humble as though you were dead.

33. He who meditateth on the wisdom which is concealed, eateth his morsel and is without desires. The holy praise his name, who hath no illusion.

34. Have no desires, but accept what circumstances may bring before you; because whatever God pleaseth to direct, can never be wrong.

35. Have no desires, but eat in faith and with meditation whatever chances to fall in your way. Go not about, tearing from the tree, which is invisible.

36. Have no desires, but take the food which chances to fall in your way, believing it to be correct, because it cometh from God; as much as if it were a mouthful of atmosphere.

37. All things are exceeding sweet to those who love God; they would never style them bitter, even if filled with poison; on the contrary, they would accept them, as if they were ambrosia.

38. Adversity is good, if on account of God; but it is useless to pain the body. Without God, the comforts of wealth are unprofitable.

39. He that believeth not in the one God, hath an unsettled mind; he will be in sorrow, though in the possession of riches: but God is without price.

40. The mind which hath not faith, is fickle and unsettled, because, not being fixed by any certainty, it changeth from one thing to another.

41. Whatever is to be, will be: therefore long not for grief nor for joy, because by seeking the one, you may find the other. Forget not to praise God.

42. Whatever is to be, will be: therefore neither wish for heaven nor be apprehensive on account of hell. Whatever was ordained, is.

43. Whatever is to be, will be; and that which God hath ordained can neither be augmented nor decreased. Let your minds understand this.

44. Whatever is to be, will be; and nothing else can happen. Accept that which is proper for you to receive, but nothing else.

45. Whatever God ordereth, shall happen, so why do ye vex yourselves? Consider God as supreme over all; he is the sight for you to behold.

46. DÁDÚ sayeth, Do unto me, oh God! as thou thinkest best—I am obedient to thee. My disciples! behold no other God; go nowhere but to him.

47. I am satisfied of this, that your happiness will be in proportion to your devotion. The heart of DÁDÚ worshippeth God night and day.

48. Condemn nothing which the creator hath made. Those are his holy servants who are satisfied with them.

49. We are not creators—the Creator is a distinct being; he can make whatever he desireth, but we can make nothing.

50. KABÍRA left Benares and went to Mughor in search of God. RÁM met him without concealment, and his object was accomplished.

51. DÁDÚ sayeth, My earnings are God. He is my food and my supporter; by his spiritual sustenance, have all my members been nourished.

52. The five elements of my existence are contented with one food: my mind is intoxicated; hunger leaveth him who worshippeth no other but God.

53. God is my clothing and my dwelling. He is my ruler, my body, and my soul.

54. God ever fostereth his creatures; even as a mother serves her offspring, and keepeth it from harm.

55. Oh God, thou who art the truth, grant me contentment, love, devotion, and faith. Thy servant DÁDÚ prayeth for true patience, and that he may be devoted to thee.

The Chapter on Meditation,—विचार का अङ्ग.

Reverence to thee, who art devoid of illusion, adoration of God, obedience to all saints, salutation to those who are pious. To God the first, and the last.

He that knoweth not delusion is my God.

1. DÁDÚ hath said, in water there exists air, and in air water; yet are these elements distinct. Meditate, therefore, on the mysterious affinity between God and the soul.

2. Even as ye see your countenance reflected in a mirror, or your shadow in the still water, so behold RÁM in your minds, because he is with all.

3. If ye look into a mirror, ye see yourselves as ye are, but he in whose mind there is no mirror cannot distinguish evil from good.

4. As the til plant contains oil, and the flower sweet odour, as butter is in milk, so is God in every thing.

5. He that formed the mind, made it as it were a temple for himself to dwell in; for God liveth in the mind, and none other but God.

6. Oh! my friend, recognize that being with whom thou art so intimately connected; think not that God is distant, but believe that like thy own shadow, He is ever near thee.

7. The stalk of the lotus cometh from out of water, and yet the lotus separates itself from the water! For why? Because it loves the moon better.

8. So let your meditations tend to one object, and believe that he who by nature is void of delusion, though not actually the mind, is in the mind of all.

9. To one that truly meditateth, there are millions, who, outwardly only, observe the forms of religion. The world indeed is filled with the latter, but of the former there are very few.

10. The heart which possesseth contentment wanteth for nothing, but that which hath it not, knoweth not what happiness meaneth.

11. If ye would be happy, cast off delusion. Delusion is an evil which ye know to be great, but have not fortitude to abandon.

12. Receive that which is perfect into your hearts, to the exclusion of all besides; abandon all things for the love of God, for this DÁDÚ declares is the true devotion.

13. Cast off pride, and become acquainted with that which is devoid of sin. Attach yourselves to RÁM, who is sinless, and suffer the thread of your meditations to be upon him.

14. All have it in their power to take away their own lives, but they cannot release their souls from punishment; for God alone is able to pardon the soul, though few deserve his mercy.

15. Listen to the admonitions of God, and you will care not for hunger nor for thirst; neither for heat, nor cold; ye will be absolved from the imperfections of the flesh.

16. Draw your mind forth, from within, and dedicate it to God; because if ye subdue the imperfections of your flesh, ye will think only of God.

17. If ye call upon God, ye will be able to subdue your imperfections and the evil inclinations of your mind will depart from you; but they will return to you again when ye cease to call upon him.

18. DÁDÚ loved RÁM incessantly; he partook of his spiritual essence and constantly examined the mirror which was within him.

19. He subdued the imperfections of the flesh, and overcame all evil inclinations; he crushed every improper desire, wherefore the light of RÁM will shine upon him.

20. He that giveth his body to the world, and rendereth up his soul to its Creator, shall be equally insensible to the sharpness of death, and the misery which is caused by pain.

21. Sit with humility at the foot of God, and rid yourselves of the impurities of your bodies. Be fearless and let no mortal qualities pervade you.

22. From the impurities of the body there is much to fear, because all sins enter into it; therefore let your dwelling be with the fearless and conduct yourselves towards the light of God.

23. For there neither sword nor poison have power to destroy, and sin cannot enter. Ye will live even as God liveth, and the fire of death will be guarded, as it were with water.

24. He that meditateth will naturally be happy, because he is wise and suffereth not the passions to spread over his mind. He loveth but one God.

25. The greatest wisdom is to prevent your minds from being influenced by bad passions, and, in meditating upon the one God. Afford help also to the poor stranger:

26. If ye are humble ye will be unknown, because it is vanity which impelleth us to boast of our own merits, and which causeth us to exult, in being spoken of by others. Meditate on the words of the holy, that the fever of your body may depart from you.

27. For when ye comprehend the words of the holy, ye will be disentangled from all impurities, and be absorbed in God. If ye flatter yourselves, you will never comprehend.

28. When ye have learned the wisdom of the invisible one from the mouth of his priests, ye will be disentangled from all impurities; turn ye round therefore, and examine yourselves well in the mirror which crowneth the lotus.

29. Meditate on that particular wisdom, which alone is able to increase in you the love and worship of God. Purify your minds, retaining only that which is excellent.

30. Meditate on him by whom all things were made. Pandits and Qázis are fools: of what avail are the heaps of books which they have compiled?

31. What does it avail to compile a heap of books? Let your minds freely meditate on the spirit of God, that they may be enlightened regarding the mystery of his divinity. Wear not away your lives, by studying the Vedas.

32. There is fire in water and water in fire, but the ignorant know it not. He is wise that meditateth on God, the beginning and end of all things.

33. Pleasure cannot exist without pain, and pain is always accompanied with pleasure. Meditate on God, the beginning and end, and remember that hereafter there will be two rewards.

34. In sweet there is bitter, and in bitter there is sweet, although the ignorant know it not. DĀDŪ hath meditated on the qualities of God, the eternal.

35. Oh man! ponder well ere thou proceedest to act. Do nothing until thou hast thoroughly sifted thy intentions.

36. Reflect with deliberation on the nature of thy inclinations before thou allowest thyself to be guided by them; acquaint thyself thoroughly with the purity of thy wishes, so that thou mayest become absorbed in God.

37. He that reflecteth first, and afterwards proceedeth to act, is a great man, but he that first acteth, and then considereth is a fool whose countenance is as black as the face of the former is resplendent.

38. He that is guided by deliberation, will never experience sorrow or anxiety: on the contrary he will always be happy.

39. Oh ye who wander in the paths of delusion, turn your minds towards God, who is the beginning and end of all things; endeavour to gain him, nor hesitate to restore your soul, when required, to that abode from whence it emanated.]

RAI DÁSÍS.

RAI DÁS was another of RÁMÁNAND's disciples, who founded a sect, confined, however, it is said, to those of his own caste, the Chamárs, or workers in hides and in leather, and amongst the very lowest of the Hindu mixed tribes: this circumstance renders it difficult, if not impossible, to ascertain whether the sect still exists: the founder must once have enjoyed some celebrity, as some of his works are included in the Adi

Granth of the Sikhs; he is there named RAVI DÁSA, which is the Sanskrit form of his name: some of his compositions also form part of the collection of hymns and prayers used by that sect at Benares: there appears to be but little known of him of any authentic character, and we must be contented with the authority of the Bhakta Málá, where he makes a rather important figure: the legend is as follows:—

One of RÁMÁNAND's pupils was a Brahmachári, whose daily duty it was to provide the offering presented to the deity: on one of these occasions, the offering consisted of grain, which the pupil had received as alms from a shop-keeper, who supplied chiefly the butchers with articles of food, and his donation was, consequently, impure: when RÁMÁNAND, in the course of his devotions, attempted to fix his mind upon the divinity, he found the task impracticable, and suspecting that some defect in the offering occasioned such an erratic imagination, he enquired whence it had been obtained: on being informed, he exclaimed, Há Chamár, and the Brahmachári soon afterwards dying was born again as RAI DÁS, the son of a worker in hides and leather.

The infant RAI DÁS retained the impression left upon his mind by his old master's anger, and refused to take any nourishment: the parents, in great affliction, applied to RÁMÁNAND, who, by order of the deity, visited the child, and recognising the person at once whispered into his ear the initiating Mantra: the effect was instantaneous: the child immediately accepted the breast, and throve, and grew up a pious votary of RÁMA.

For some time the profits of his trade maintained RAI DÁS, and left him something to divide amongst the devout; but a season of scarcity supervening reduced him to great distress, when Bhagaván, in the semblance of a Vaishnava, brought him a piece of the Philosopher's stone, and shewing him its virtue made him a present of it. RAI DÁS paid little regard to the donation, replying to the effect of the following Pada, as since versified by Súr Dás.

Pada. "A great treasure is the name of HARI to his people: it multiplieth day by day, nor doth expenditure diminish it: it abideth securely in the mansion, and neither by night nor by day can any thief steal it. The Lord is the wealth of Súr Dás, what need hath he of a stone?"

The miraculous stone was thrown aside, and when, thirteen months afterwards, Vishnú again visited his votary, he found no use had been made of it: as this expedient had failed, the deity scattered gold coin in places where RAI DÁS could not avoid finding it: the discovery of this treasure filled the poor Currier with alarm, to pacify which Krishna appeared to him in a dream, and desired him to apply the money either to his own use or that of the deity, and thus authorised, RAI DÁS erected a temple, of which he constituted himself the high priest, and acquired great celebrity in his new character.

The reputation of RAI DÁS was further extended by its attracting a persecution, purposely excited by Vishńu to do honour to his worshipper, the deity well knowing that the enmity of the malignant is the most effective instrument for setting open to the world the retired glory of the pious: he therefore inspired the Brahmans to complain thus to the king.

Śloka (Sanskrit stanza). “Where things profane are reverenced, where sacred things are profanely administered, there three calamities will be felt, famine, death, and fear*.”

A Chamár, oh king, ministers to the Sálagrám, and poisons the town with his *Prasád*¹; men and women, every one will become an outcast; banish him to preserve the honour of your people.

The king accordingly sent for the culprit, and ordered him to resign the sacred stone. RAI DÁS expressed his readiness to do so, and only requested the Rájá’s presence at his delivery of it to the Brahmans, as, he said, if after being given to them it should return to him, they would accuse him of stealing it. The Rájá assenting, the Sálagrám was brought, and placed on a cushion in the assembly. The Brahmans were desired to remove it, but attempted to take it away in vain: they repeated hymns and charms, and

* [अपूजा यत्र पूज्यन्ते पूज्यपूजाव्यतिक्रमः ।

तत्र चीणि प्रवर्त्तन्ते दुर्भिर्व मरणं भयं ॥

See Panchatantra III, 202.]

¹ The Prasád is any article of food that has been consecrated by previous presentation to an idol, after which it is distributed amongst the worshippers on the spot, or sent to persons of consequence at their own houses.

read the Vedas, but the stone was immovable. RAI DÁS then addressed it with this Pada:-

Pada. “Lord of Lórds, thou art my refuge, the root of Supreme happiness art thou, to whom there is none equal: behold me at thy feet: in various wombs have I abided, and from the fear of death have I not been delivered. I have been plunged in the deceits of sense, of passion, and illusion; but now let my trust in thy name dispel apprehension of the future, and teach me to place no reliance on what the world deems virtue. Accept, oh God, the devotions of thy slave RAI DÁS, and be thou glorified as the Purifier of the sinful.”

The saint had scarcely finished, when the Sálagrám and cushion flew into his arms, and the king, satisfied of his holy pretensions, commanded the Brahmans to desist from their opposition. Amongst the disciples of RAI DÁS was JHÁLÍ, the Ráni of Chitore: her adopting a Chamár, as her spiritual preceptor, excited a general commotion amongst the Brahmans of her state, and, alarmed for her personal safety, she wrote to RAI DÁS to request his counsel and aid. He repaired to her, and desired her to invite the Brahmans to a solemn feast: they accepted the invitation, and sat down to the meal provided for them, when between every two Brahmans there appeared a RAI DÁS. This miraculous multiplication of himself had the desired effect, and from being his enemies and revilers they became his disciples.

Such are the legends of the Bhakta Málá, and whatever we may think of their veracity, their tenor, representing an individual of the most abject class, an absolute outcast in Hindu estimation, as a teacher and a saint, is not without interest and instruction.

SENÁ PANTHÍS.

SENÁ, the barber, was the third of Rámánand's disciples, who established a separate schism; the name of which, and of its founder, is possibly all that now remains of it. SENÁ and his descendants were, for sometime, however, the family-Gurus of the Rájás of Bandhogarh, and thence enjoyed considerable authority and reputation: the origin of this connexion is the subject of a ludicrous legend in the Bhakta Málá.

SENÁ, the barber of the Rájá of Bandhogarh, was a devout worshipper of VISHNU, and a constant frequenter of the meetings of the pious: on one of these occasions, he suffered the time to pass unheeded, when he ought to have been officiating in his tonsorial capacity, and VISHNU, who noticed the circumstance, and knew the cause, was alarmed for his votary's personal integrity. The god, therefore, charitably assumed the figure of SENÁ, and equipping himself suitably, waited on the Rájá, and performed the functions of the barber, much to the Rájá's satisfaction, and without detection, although the prince perceived an unusual fragrance about his barber's person, the ambrosial odour that indicated present deity, which he supposed to impregnate the oil used in lubricating his royal limbs. The pretended barber had scarcely departed, when the real one appeared, and stammered out his excuses: his astonishment and the Rájá's were alike, but the discernment of the latter was more acute, for he immediately comprehended the whole business, fell at his barber's feet, and elected for his spiritual guide an individual so pre-eminently distinguished by the favour and protection of the deity.

RUDRA SAMPRADÁYÍS, or VALLABHÁCHÁRÍS.

The sects of Vaishnávas we have hitherto noticed are chiefly confined to professed ascetics, and to a few families originally from the south and west of India, or, as in the case of the Rámávats and Kabír Panthí, to such amongst the mass of society, as are of a bold and curious spirit; but the opulent and luxurious amongst the men, and by far the greater portion of the women, attach themselves to the worship of KRÍSHNA and his mistress RÁDHÁ, either singly, or conjointly, as in the case of VISHNU and LAKSHMÍ, amongst the Rámánujas, and SÍTÁ and RÁM, amongst the Rámávats. There is, however, another form, which is perhaps more popular still, although much interwoven with the others. This is the BÁLA GOPÁLA, the infant KRÍSHNA, the worship of whom is very widely diffused amongst all ranks of Indian society, and which originated with the founder of the Rudra Sampradáyi sect, VALÍABHA ÁCHÁRYA; it is perhaps better known, however, from the title of its teachers, as the religion of the Gokulastha Gosáins.

The original teacher of the philosophical tenets of this sect is said to have been VISHNU SWÁMÍ, a commentator on the texts of the Vedas, who, however, admitted disciples from the Brahmanical cast only, and considered the state of the Sannyásí, or ascetic, as essential to the communication of his doctrines. He was succeeded by JNÁNA DEVA, who was followed by NÁMA DEVA and TRILOCHANA, and they, although whether immediately or not does not appear, by VAL-LABHA SWÁMÍ, the son of LAKSHMAÑA BHATÍ, a Talinga Brahman: this Sannyásí taught early in the sixteenth century: he resided originally at Gokul, a village on the left bank of the Jamna, about three eos to the east of Mathurá: after remaining here sometime, he travelled through India as a pilgrim, and amongst other places he visited, according to the Bhakta Málá, the court of KRÍSHNA DEVA, king of Vijayanagar, apparently the same as KRÍSHNA RÁYALU, who reigned about the year 1520, where he overcame the Smártas Brahmans in a controversy, and was elected by the Vaishnávas as their chief, with the title of Áchárj: hence he travelled to Ujain, and took up his abode under a Pípal tree, on the banks of the Síprá, said to be still in existence, and designated as his Baithak, or station. Besides this, we find traces of him in other places. There is a Baithak of his amongst the Gháts of Muttrá, and about two miles from the fort of Chánár is a place called his well, Áchárj kúán, comprising a temple and Math, in the court yard of which is the well in question; the saint is said to have resided here sometime. After this peregrination VAL-LABHA returned to Briindávan, where, as a reward for his fatigues and his faith, he was honoured by a visit from KRÍSHNÁ in person, who enjoined him to introduce the worship of Bálagopál, or Gopál Lál, and founded the faith which at present exists in so flourishing a condition. VALLABHA is supposed to have closed his career in a miracle: he had finally settled at Jethan Berí, at Benáres, near which a Math still subsists, but at length, having accomplished his mission, he is said to have entered the Ganges at Hanumán Ghát, when, stooping into the water, he disappeared: a brilliant flame arose from the spot, and, in the presence of a host of spectators, he ascended to heaven, and was lost in the firmament.

The worship of KRÍSHNÁ as one with VISHNU and the universe dates evidently from the *Mahábhárat*¹, and his more juvenile forms are brought pre-eminently to notice in the account of his infancy, contained in the *Bhágavat*², but neither of these works discriminates him from VISHNU, nor do they recommend his infantine or adolescent state to particular veneration. At the same time some hints may have been derived from them for the institution of this division of the ² Particularly in the tenth book, which is appropriated to the life of KRÍSHNÁ. The same subject occupies a considerable portion of the Hari Vaní section of the Mahábhárat, of the Pátlá section of the Padma Purána, the fifth section of the Vishnu Purána, and the whole of the Ádi Upapurána.

HINDU faith¹. In claiming, however, supremacy for KRISHNA, the Brahma Vaivartta Purana is most decided, and this work places KRISHNA in a heaven, and society exclusively his own, and derives from him all the objects of existence*.

According to this authority, the residence of KRISHNA is denominated Goloka; it is far above the three ¹ Thus in the Vana Parva of the Mahabharat [v. 12895 ff.], MARRKANDEYA MUNI, at the time of a minor destruction of the world, sees, "amidst the waters, an Indian Fig tree of vast size, on a principal branch of which was a bed ornamented with divine coverings, on which lay a child with a countenance like the moon." The saint, though acquainted with the past, present, and future, cannot recognise the child, who therefore appears of the hue, and with the symbols of KRISHNA, and desires the sage to rest within his substance from his weary wanderings over the submerged world.

In the Bhagavat [X, 3, 9. 10.] it is stated, that when first born, VASUDEVA beheld the child of the hue of a cloud, with four arms, dressed in a yellow garb, and bearing the weapons, the jewels and the diadem of VISHNU:

and the same work describes YASODA, his adoptive mother, as seeing the universe in the mouth of the child [X, 7, 36. 37. (30. 31. Calcutta edition):

worlds, and has, at five hundred millions of Yojanas below it, the separate Lokas of VISHNU and ŚIVĀ, Vai-kuṇṭha, and Kailás. This region is indestructible, whilst all else is subject to annihilation, and in the centre of it abides KRISHNA, of the colour of a dark cloud, in the bloom of youth, clad in yellow raiment, splendidly adorned with celestial gems, and holding a flute. He is exempt from Máyá, or delusion, and all qualities, eternal, alone, and the Paramátmá, or supreme soul of the world.

KRISHNA being alone in the Goloka, and meditating on the waste of creation, gave origin to a being of a female form endowed with the three Guṇas, and thence the primary agent in creation. This was Prakṛiti, or Máyá, and the system so far corresponds with that of the other Vaishṇavas, and of the Puráṇas generally speaking. They having adopted, in fact, the Sánkhya system, interweaving with it their peculiar sectarian notions.

Crude matter, and the five elements, are also made to issue from KRISHNA, and then all the divine beings. NÁRÁYAÑA, or VISHNU, proceeds from his right side, MAHÁDEVA from his left, BRAHMÁ from his hand, DHARMA from his breath, SARASWATÍ from his mouth, LAKSHMÍ from his mind, DURGÁ from his understanding, RÁDHÁ from his left side. Three hundred millions of Gopis, or female companions of RÁDHÁ, exude from the pores of her skin, and a like number of Gopas, or companions of KRISHNA, from the pores of his skin: the very cows and their calves, properly the tenants of Goloka, but destined to inhabit the Groves of Brīndāvan, are produced from the same exalted source.

In this description of creation, however, the deity is still spoken of as a young man, and the Purāṇa therefore affords only indirect authority in the marvels it narrates of his infancy for the worship of the child. Considering, however, that in this, or in any other capacity, the acts of the divinity are his Lilā, or sport, there is no essential difference between those who worship him either as a boy or as a man, and any of his forms may be adored by this class of Vaishṇavas, and all his principal shrines are to them equally objects of pilgrimage. As the elements and chief agents of creation are thus said to proceed from the person of Kṛiṣṇa, it may be inferred that the followers of this creed adopt the principles of the Vedānta philosophy, and consider the material world as one in substance, although in an illusory manner, with the supreme. Life is also identified with spirit, according to the authority of a popular work¹. None of the

तब श्री आचार्य जी ने कहा । जो तुम जीव को स्वभाव जानती हो दोषवंत है । तो तुम सो सम्बन्ध कैसे होय । तब श्री आचार्य जी सो श्री उकुर जी कहे । जो तुम जीव को ब्रह्म सम्बन्ध करो हों तिन को अङ्गीकार करोगे ॥

“Then Achāry Ji said, you know the nature of Life, it is full of defects, how can it be combined with you? to which Śrī Thākur Ji (Kṛiṣṇa) replied: Do you unite Brahma and Life in philosophical writings of the chief teachers of this system have been met with.

Amongst other articles of the new creed, VALLABHA introduced one, which is rather singular for a Hindu religious innovator or reformer: he taught that privation formed no part of sanctity, and that it was the duty of the teachers and his disciples to worship their deity, not in nudity and hunger, but in costly apparel and choice food, not in solitude and mortification, but in the pleasures of society, and the enjoyment of the world. The Gosáins, or teachers, are almost always family men, as was the founder VALLABHA; for after he had shaken off the restrictions of the monastic order to which he originally belonged, he married, by the particular order, it is said, of his new god. The Gosáins are always clothed with the best raiment, and fed with the daintiest viands by their followers, over whom they have unlimited influence: part of the connexion between the Guru and teacher being the three-fold Samarpań, or consignment of Tan, Man, and Dhan, body, mind, and wealth, to the spiritual guide. The followers of the order are especially numerous amongst the mercantile community, and the Gosáins themselves are often largely engaged, also, in maintaining a connexion amongst the commercial establishments of remote parts of the country, as they are constantly travelling over India, under pretence of pilgrimage, to the sacred shrines of the sect, and notoriously reconcile, upon these occasions, the profits of trade with the benefits of devotion: as religious travellers, however, this union of objects renders them more respectable than the vagrants of any other sect.

what way you will, I shall concur, and thence all its defects will be removed."

The practices of the sect are of a similar character with those of other regular worshippers: their temples and houses have images of GOPĀL, of KRISHNA and RĀDHĀ, and other divine forms connected with this incarnation, of metal chiefly, and not unfrequently of gold: the image of KRISHNA represents a chubby boy, of the dark hue of which VISHNU is always represented: it is richly decorated and sedulously attended; receiving eight times a day the homage of the votaries. These occasions take place at fixed periods and for certain purposes; and at all other seasons, and for any other object, except at stated and periodical festivals, the temples are closed and the deity invisible. The eight daily ceremonials are the following:—

1. Mangala; the morning levee: the image being washed and dressed is taken from the couch, where it is supposed to have slept during the night, and placed upon a seat about half an hour after sun-rise: slight refreshments are then presented to it, with betel and Pán: lamps are generally kept burning during this ceremony.

2. Śringāra; the image having been anointed and perfumed with oil, camphor, and sandal, and splendidly attired, now holds his public court: this takes place about an hour and a half after the preceding, or when four Gharīs of the day have elapsed.

3. Gwāla; the image is now visited, preparatory to his going out to attend the cattle along with the cow-herd; this ceremony is held about forty-eight minutes after the last, or when six Gharīs have passed.

4. Rāja Bhóga; held at mid-day, when KRISHNĀ is supposed to come in from the pastures, and dine: all sorts of delicacies are placed before the image, and both those and other articles of food dressed by the ministers of the temple are distributed to the numerous votaries present, and not unfrequently sent to the dwellings of worshippers of some rank and consequence.

5. Utthāpan; the calling up; the summoning of the god from his siesta: this takes place at six Gharīs, or between two and three hours before sun-set.

6. Bhóga; the afternoon meal, about half an hour after the preceding.

7. Sandhyá; about sun-set, the evening toilet of the image, when the ornaments of the day are taken off, and fresh unguent and perfume applied.

8. Śayan; retiring to repose: the image, about eight or nine in the evening, is placed upon a bed, refreshments and water in proper vases, together with the betel box and its appartenances, are left near it, when the votaries retire, and the temple is shut till the ensuing morning.

Upon all these occasions the ceremony is much the same, consisting in little more than the presentation of flowers, perfumes, and food by the priests and votaries, and the repetition, chiefly by the former, of Sanskrit stanzas in praise of KRISHNA, interspersed with a variety of prostrations and obeisances. There is no established ritual, indeed, in the Hindu religion for general use, nor any prescribed form of public adoration.

Besides the diurnal ceremonials described, there are several annual festivals of great repute observed throughout India: of these, in Bengal and Orissa, the Rath Yátra, or procession of JAGANNÁTH in his car, is the most celebrated, but it is rarely held in upper India, and then only by natives of Bengal established in the provinces: the most popular festival at Benares, and generally to the westward, is the Janmáshṭami, the nativity of KRISHNA, on the eighth day of Bhádra (August¹). Another is the Rás Yátra, or annual commemoration of the dance of the frolicsome deity with the sixteen Gopis. This last is a very popular eighth day of the calendar, or civil day, whilst some of the Rámdáujas, and the Nimdwats regulate the duration of their fast by the moon's passage through the asterism Rohini. The consequence is, that the Smártas often fast on the 7th, one set of Vaishnávas on the 8th, and another on the 9th, whilst those who affect great sanctity sometimes go thirty hours without food; an extract from last year's calendar will very well exemplify these distinctions.

3rd Bhádra, 17th August 1825, Tuesday, Saptamí, 10 Dañdas 17 Palas. The Janmáshamí Vrata and a Fast.

4th Bhádra, 18th August, Wednesday, Ashtamí, 9 Dañdas 18 Palas. Fast according to the Vaishnávas of Braj.

5th Bhádra, 19th August, Thursday, Navamí, 7 Dañdas 4 Palas. Rohiní Nakshatra, till 10 Dañdas 52 Palas, at which hour Páraha, the end of the fast.

Now the 3d day of the Solar Bhádra was the 7th of the Lunar Month, but it comprised little more than ten Dañdas or four hours of that lunation: as it included sun-rise, however, it was the 7th of the calendar, or civil day. The eighth Tithi, or lunation, therefore, began about that time, or four hours after sun-rise, and the Smártas, Śaivas, and Śáktas observed the fast on that day; they began with sun-rise, however, as there is a specific rule for the Sankalpa, or pledge, to perform the usual rite at dawn. This Ashtamí comprised midnight, and was the more sacred on that account.

The 4th of Bhádra was the Ashtamí, or eighth of the Vaishnávas, although the lunation only extended to 9 Dañdas; or less than four hours after sun-rise, but they are particularly enjoined to avoid the Saptamí, or the Ashrami conjoined with it, and therefore they could not commence their fast earlier, although they lost thereby the midnight of the eighth lunation, which they were, consequently, compelled to extend into the night of the ninth. They fasted till the next morning, unless they chose to eat after midnight, which, on this occasion, is allowable.

festival, and not an uninteresting one: vast crowds, clad in their best attire, collecting in some open place in the vicinity of the town, and celebrating the event with music, singing, and dramatic representations of KRISHNA's sports: all the public singers and dancers lend their services on this occasion, and trust for a remuneration to the gratuities of the spectators: at Benares the Rás Yátra is celebrated at the village of Sívapur, and the chief dancers and musicians, ranging themselves under the banners of the most celebrated of the profession, go out in formal procession: tents, huts, and booths are erected, swings and round-abouts form a favourite amusement of the crowd, and sweet-meats and fruits are displayed in tempting profusion: the whole has the character of a crowded fair in Europe, and presents, in an immense concourse of people, an endless variety of rich costume, and an infinite diversity of picturesque accompaniment, a most lively and splendid scene. The same festival is held from the tenth day of the light half of Kuár (Septr.-Octr.) to the day of the full moon at Bríndávan,

The 5th of Bhádra was the Navamí, or ninth of the calendar, but it included a portion of the moon's passage through Rohini, and the strict Vaishnáras of the different sects should not have performed the Páraña, the close of the fast, earlier, or before 10 Dañdas and 52 Palas after sun-rise, or about nine o'clock. Those Vaishnávas, however, who wholly regulate their observance by the Asterism, and referring also to the necessity of commencing it with sun-rise, would only have begun their fast on the calendar Navamí, and have held the Páraña on Friday the 10th, the third day after the proper birth-day of their deity.

where a stone plat-form, or stage, has been built for the exhibition of the mimic dance in a square near the river side. Besides their public demonstrations of respect, pictures and images of GOPÁLA are kept in the houses of the members of the sect, who, before they sit down to any of their meals, take care to offer a portion to the idol. Those of the disciples who have performed the triple Samarpaña eat only from the hands of each other; and the wife or child that has not exhibited the same mark of devotion to the Guru can neither cook for such a disciple nor eat in his society.

The mark on the forehead consists of two red perpendicular lines meeting in a semicircle at the root of the nose, and having a round spot of red between them. The Bhaktas have the same marks as the Sri Vaishnавas on the breasts and arms, and some also make the central spot on the forehead with a black earth, called Syámabandí, or any black metallic substance: the necklace and rosary are made of the stalk of the Tulasi. The salutations amongst them are Śrīkrishna and Jaya Gopál.

The great authority of the sect is the Bhágavat, as explained in the Subodhini, or Commentary of VALLABHÁCHÁRYA: he is the author also of a Bháshya on part of VYÁSA's Sútras, and of other Sanskrit works, as the Siddhánta Rahasya, Bhágavata Lilá Rahasya, and Ekánta Rahasya; these, however, are only for the learned, and are now very rare. Amongst the votaries in general, various works upon the history of KRÍSHNÁ are current, but the most popular are the Vishnú Padas, stanzas in Bháshá, in praise of VISHNÚ, attributed to VALLABHA himself; the Braj Vilás, a Bhákhá poem of some length, descriptive of KRÍSHNÁ's life, during his residence at Brindávan, by BRAJ VÁSÍ DÁS; the Ashṭa Chháp, an account of VALLABHA's eight chief disciples, and the Várttá, or Bárttá, a collection in Hindústání of marvellous and insipid anecdotes of VALLABHA and his primitive followers, amounting to the number of eighty-four, and including persons of both sexes, and every class of Hindus. The Bhakta Málá also contains a variety of legends regarding the different teachers of this sect, but it is less a text-book with this sect than any other class of Vaishnávas, as the Várttá occupies its place amongst the worshippers of Gopál. The following are specimens of this work, and by no means the most unfavourable:—

DÁMODAR DÁS, of Kanoj, was a disciple of ŚRÍ ÁCHÁRYA (VALLABHÁCHÁRYA). Like the rest of the members of this sect, he had an image of KRÍSHNÁ in his house. One day it was exceedingly hot, and when night came, ŚRÍ THÁKUR ji (the image) woke the maid servant, and desired her to open the doors of his chamber, as it was very warm. She obeyed, and taking a pankha, fanned him—Early in the morning, DÁMODAR DÁS observed the doors of the chamber open, and enquired how this had happened: the girl mentioned the circumstance, but her master was much vexed that she had done this, and that ŚRÍ THÁKUR ji had not called him to do it. ŚRÍ THÁKUR ji knowing his thoughts said: I told her to open the doors, why are you displeased with her? you shut me up here in a close room, and go to sleep yourself on an open and cool terrace. Then DÁMODAR DÁS made a vow, and said: I will not taste consecrated food until I have built a new temple, but his wife advised him, and urged: this is not a business of five or six days, why go without the consecrated food so long? Then he said: I will not partake of the consecrated sweetmeats, I will only eat the fruits. And so he did, and the temple was completed, and Śrī Thākūr ji was enshrined in it, and DÁMODAR DÁS distributed food to the *Vaishnava*s, and they partook thereof.

Śrī Thākūr ji had a faithful worshipper in a Mahratta lady, whom, with the frolicsomeness of boyhood, he delighted to tease. One day, a woman selling vegetables having passed without the Bābī noticing her, Śrī Thākūr ji said to her: will you not buy any vegetables for me to-day? she replied: whenever any one selling them comes this way, I will buy some; to which he answered: one has just now passed. The Bābī replied: no matter, if one has gone by, another will presently be here. But this did not satisfy the little deity, who leaping from his pedestal ran after the woman, brought her back, and, after haggling for the price with her himself, made his protectress purchase what he selected.

As RÁNĀVYÁS and JAGANNÁTH, two of VALLABHÁCHÁRYA's disciples, were bathing, a woman of the Rájput caste came down to the river to burn herself with her husband; on which JAGANNÁTH said to his companion: what is the fashion of a woman becoming a Sati? RÁNĀVYÁS shook his head, and said: the fruitless union of beauty with a dead body. The Rájput observing RÁNĀVYÁS shake his head, her purpose at that moment was changed, and she did not become a Sati, on which her kindred were much pleased. Some time afterwards, meeting with the two disciples, the Rájput told them of the effect of their former interview, and begged to know what had passed between them. RÁNĀVYÁS being satisfied that the compassion of Śrī Achārj was extended to her, repeated what he had said to JAGANNÁTH, and his regret that her charms should not be devoted to the service of Śrī Thākūr ji, rather than be thrown away upon a dead body. The Rájput enquired how the service of Thākūr ji was to be performed, on which RÁNĀVYÁS, after making her bathe, communicated to her the initiating prayer, and she thenceforth performed the menial service of the deity, washing his garments, bringing him water, and discharging other similar duties in the dwelling of RÁNÁVYÁS with entire and fervent devotion, on which account she obtained the esteem of Sri Achrdj, and the favour of the deity.

RÁM DÁS was married in his youth, but adopting ascetic principles, he refused to take his wife home: at last his father-in-law left his daughter in her husband's dwelling, but RÁM DÁS would have nothing to say to her, and set off on a pilgrimage to Dwá-raká: his wife followed him, but he threw stones at her, and she was compelled to remain at a distance from him. At noon he halted and bathed the god, and prepared his food, and presented it, and then took the Prasád and put it in a vessel, and fed upon what remained, but it was to no purpose, and he was still hungry. Thus passed two or three days, when RAÑACHHOÓR appeared to him in a dream, and asked him why he thus ill-treated his wife. He said, he was Virakta (a coenobite), and what did he want with a wife. Then RAÑACHHOÓR asked him, why he had married, and assured him that such an unsocial spirit was not agreeable to Sri Achárya, and desired him to take his wife unto him; for RAÑACHHOÓR could not bear the distress of the poor woman, as he has a gentle heart, and his nature has been imparted to the Achárya and his disciples. When morning came, RÁM DÁS called to his wife, and suffered her to accompany him, by which she was made happy. When the time for preparing their food arrived, RÁM DÁS prepared it himself, and after presenting the portion to the image, gave a part of it to his wife. After a few days RAÑACHHOÓR again appeared, and asked him, why he did not allow his wife to cook, to which RÁM DÁS replied, that she had not received the initiating name from Sri Achárya, and was, therefore, unfit to prepare his food. RAÑACHHOÓR, therefore, directed him to communicate the Nám (the name) to his wife, and after returning to the Achárya, get him to repeat it. Accordingly RÁM DÁS initiated his wife, and this being confirmed by the Achárya, she also became his disciple, and, with her husband, assiduously worshipped Sri Thákur ji.

VALLABHA was succeeded by his son VITALA NÁTH, known amongst the sect by the appellation of Sri Gosáin Ji, VALLABHA's designation being Sri Áchárj Ji. VITALA NÁTH, again, had seven sons, GIRDHARI RÁE, GOVIND RÁE, BÁLA KRISHNÁ, GOKUL NÁTH, RAGHUNÁTH, YADUNÁTH, and GHANASYÁMA; these were all teachers, and their followers, although in all essential points the same, form as many different communities. Those of GOKUL NÁTH, indeed, are peculiarly separate from the rest, looking upon their own Gosáins as the only legitimate teachers of the faith, and withholding all sort of reverence from the persons and Maths of the successors of his brethren: an exclusive preference that does not prevail amongst the other divisions of the faith, who do homage to all the descendants of all VITALA NÁTH's sons.

The worshippers of this sect are very numerous and opulent, the merchants and bankers, especially those from Guzarat and Málwa, belonging to it: their temples and establishments are numerous all over India, but particularly at Mathurá and Bríndávan, the latter of which alone is said to contain many hundreds, amongst which are three of great opulence. In Benares are two temples of great repute and wealth, one sacred to Lál ji, and the other to *Purushottama ji*¹. Jagannáth and Dwáraká are also particularly venerated by this sect, but the most celebrated of all the Gosáin establishments is at Śrī Náth Dwár, in Ajmír. The image at this shrine is said to have transported itself thither from Mathurá, when Aurengzeb ordered the temple it was there placed in to be destroyed.— The present shrine is modern, but richly endowed, and the high priest, a descendant of GOKUL NÁTH, a man of great wealth and importance¹. It is a matter of obligation with the members of this sect to visit Śrī Náth Dwár at least once in their lives; they receive there a certificate to that effect, issued by the head Gosáin, and, in return, contribute according to their means to the enriching of the establishment: it is not an uncurious feature in the notions of this sect, that the veneration paid to their Gosáins is paid solely to their descent, and unconnected with any idea of their sanctity or learning; they are not unfrequently destitute of all pretensions to individual respectability, but they not the less enjoy the homage of their followers; the present chief, at Śrináth Dwár, is said not to understand the certificate he signs.

MÍRÁ BÁÍS.

These may be considered as forming a subdivision of the preceding, rather than a distinct sect, although, in the adoption of a new leader, and the worship of KRÍSHNÁ under a peculiar form, they differ essentially from the followers of VALLĀBHA: at the same time it is chiefly amongst those sectarians, that MÍRÁ BÁÍ and her deity, RAÑACHHOR, are held in high veneration, and, except in the west of India, it does not appear that she has many immediate and exclusive adherents.

MÍRÁ BÁÍ is the heroine of a prolix legend in the Bhakta Málá, which is a proof at least of her popularity: as the author of sacred poems addressed to the deity, as Vishnú, she also enjoys a classical celebrity, and some of her odes are to be found in the collections which constitute the ritual of the deistical sects, especially those of Nának and Kabír: according to the authority cited, she flourished in the time of Akbar, who was induced by her reputation to pay her a visit, accompanied by the famous musician Tán Sen, and it is said, that they both acknowledged the justice of her claim to celebrity.

MÍRÁ was the daughter of a petty Rájá, the sovereign of a place called Mertá; she was married to the Rána of Udayapur, but soon after being taken home by him quarrelled with her mother-in-law, a worshipper of Devi, respecting compliance with the family adoration of that goddess, and was, in consequence of her persevering refusal to desert the worship of KRISHNÁ, expelled the Rána's bed and palace: she appears to have been treated, however, with consideration, and to have been allowed an independent establishment, owing, probably, rather to the respect paid to her abilities, than a notion of her personal sanctity, although the latter was attested, if we may believe our guide, by her drinking unhesitatingly a draught of poison presented to her by her husband, and without its having the power to do her harm. In her uncontrolled station she adopted the worship of RAṄACHHOṄ, a form of the youthful KRISHNA; she became the patroness of the vagrant Vaishnavas, and visited in pilgrimage Brindavan and Dwáraká: whilst at the latter, some persecution of the Vaishnavas at Udayapur appears to have been instituted, and Brahmans were sent to bring her home from Dwáraká: previously to departing, she visited the temple of her tutelary deity, to take leave of him, when, on the completion of her adorations, the image opened, and MÍRÁ leaping into the fissure, it closed, and she finally disappeared. In memory of this miracle it is said, that the image of MÍRÁ BÁI is worshipped at Udayapur in conjunction with that of RAṄACHHOṄ. The Padas that induced this marvel, and which are current as the compositions of MÍRÁ BÁI*, are the two following:

Pada 1.— Oh, sovereign RAṄACHHOṄ, give me to make Dwáraká my abode: with thy shell, discus, mace, and lotus, dispel the fear of YAMA: eternal rest is visiting thy sacred shrines; supreme delight is the clash of thy shell and cymbals: I have abandoned my love, my possessions, my principality, my husband. MÍRÁ, thy servant, comes to thee for refuge, oh, take her wholly to thee.

Pada 2.— If thou knowest me free from stain, so accept me:

save thee, there is none other that will show me compassion: do thou, then, have mercy upon me: let not weariness, hunger, anxiety, and restlessness consume this frame with momentary decay. Lord of MIRÁ, GIRDHARA her beloved, accept her, and never let her be separated from thee.

BRAHMA SAMPRADÁYÍS, or MADHWÁCHÁRÍS.

This division of the *Vaishnava*s is altogether unknown in Gangetic Hindustan. A few individuals belonging to it, who are natives of southern India, may be occasionally encountered, but they are not sufficiently numerous to form a distinct community, nor have they any temple or teachers of their own. It is in the peninsula, that the sect is most extensively to be found*, and it is not comprised, therefore, in the scope of this sketch: as, however, it is acknowledged to be one of the four great Sampradáiyas, or religious systems, such brief notices of it as have been collected will not be wholly out of place.

The institution of this sect is posterior to that of the *Śrī Vaishnava*s, or Rámánujas: the founder was MADHWÁCHÁRYA¹, a Brahman, the son of MADHIGE BHÁTTA, who was born in the Śaka year 1121 (A. D. 1199) in Tuluva: according to the legendary belief of his followers, he was an incarnation of Váyu, or the god of air, who took upon him the human form by desire of NÁRÁYAÑA, and who had been previously incarnate as Hanumán and Bhíma, in preceding ages. He was educated in the convent established at Ananteshvar, and in his ninth year was initiated into the order of Anachorets by ACHYUTA PRACHA, a descendant of SANAKA, son of BRAHMÁ. At that early age also he composed his Bháshya, or commentary on the Gitá, which he carried to Badarikáśrama, in the Himalaya, to present to VEDAVYÁSA, by whom he was received with great respect, and presented with three Sálagráms, which he brought back and established as objects of worship in the Maths of Udipi, Madhyatala, and Subrahmaṇya—he also erected and consecrated at Udipi the image of KRISHNA, that was originally made by ARJUNA, of which he became miraculously possessed.

* [Dr. Graul's Reise nach Ostindien. Leipzig: 1855. Vol. IV, p. 139.]

A vessel from Dwáraká, trading along the Malabar coast, had taken on board, either accidentally or as ballast, a quantity of Gopichandana, or the sacred clay, from that city, in which the image was immersed: the vessel was wrecked off the Coast of Tuluva, but MADHWA receiving divine intimation of the existence of the image had it sought for, and recovered from the place where it had sunk¹, and established it as the principal object of his devotion at Udipi, which has since continued to be the head quarters of the sect. He resided here for some time himself, and composed, it is said, thirty-seven works¹. After some time he went upon a controversial tour, in which he triumphed over various teachers, and amongst others, it is said, over Śāṅkara Āchārya—he finally, in his 79th year, departed to Badarikásrama, and there continues to reside with VYĀSA, the compiler of the Vedas and Puráñas.

Before his relinquishing charge of the shrine he had established, MADHWÁCHÁRYA had very considerably extended his followers, so that he was enabled to establish eight different temples, in addition to the principal temple, or that of Krishna, at Udipi: in these were placed images of different forms of *Vishnu*², and the superintendance of them was entrusted to the brother of the founder, and eight Sannyásis, who were Brahmans, from the banks of the Godávari. These establishments still exist, and, agreeably to the code of the founder, each Sannyásī, in turn, officiates as superior of the chief station at Udipi for two years, ¹ The principal of these are—the Gítá Bháshya, Sútra Bháshya, Rig-bháshya, Daśopanishad Bháshya—Anuvákánunaya Vivárná, Anúvedánta Rasa Prakaraṇa, Bhárata Tátparya Nirṇaya, Bhágavata-tátparya, Gitátátparya, Krishnámrita Mahárńava, Tantra Sára. or two years and a half. The whole expense of the establishment devolves upon the superior for the time being, and, as it is the object of each to outvie his predecessor, the charges¹ are much heavier than the receipts of the institution, and, in order to provide for them, the Sannyásis employ the intervals of their temporary charge in travelling about the country, and levying contribution on their lay votaries, the amount of which is frequently very large, and is appropriated for the greater part to defray the costs of the occasional pontificate.

The eight Maths are all in Tuluva, below the Gháts², but, at the same time, MADHWÁCHÁRYA authorised the foundation of others above the Gháts under PADMANÁBHA TÍRTHA, to whom he gave images of RÁMA, and the Vyása Sálagrám, with instructions to disseminate his doctrines, and collect money for the use of the shrine at Udipi: there are four establishments under the descendants of this teacher above the Gháts, and the superiors visit Udipi from time to time, but never officiate there as pontiffs.

The superiors, or Gurus, of the Mádhwa sect, are Brahmans and Sannyásis, or profess coenobitic observances: the disciples, who are domesticated in the several Maths, profess also perpetual celibacy. The lay votaries of these teachers are members of every class of society, except the lowest, and each Guru has a number of families hereditarily attached to him, whose spiritual guidance he may sell or mortgage to a Brahman of any sect.

The ascetic professors of MADHWÁCHÁRYA's school adopt the external appearance of Dandís, laying aside the Brahmanical cord, carrying a staff and a water-pot, going bare-headed, and wearing a single wrapper stained of an orange colour with an ochry clay: they are usually adopted into the order from their boyhood, and acknowledge no social affinities nor interests. The marks common to them, and the lay votaries of the order, are the impress of the symbols of Vishnú upon their shoulders and breasts, stamped with a hot iron, and the frontal mark, which consists of two perpendicular lines made with Gopichandana, and joined at the root of the nose like that of the Sri Vaishnávas; but instead of a red line down the centre, the Madhwácháris make a straight black line with the charcoal from incense offered to Náráyána, terminating in a round mark made with turmeric.

The essential dogma of this sect, like that of the Vaishnávas in general, is the identification of Vishnú with the Supreme Spirit, as the pre-existent cause of the universe¹, from whose substance the world was made¹. This primeval Vishnū they also affirm to be endowed with real attributes², most excellent, although indefinable and independent. As there is one independent, however, there is also one dependent, and this doctrine is the characteristic dogma of the sect, distinguishing its professors from the followers of RÁMÁNUJA as well as ŚANKARA, or those who maintain the qualified or absolute unity of the deity. The creed of the Mádhwas is Dwaita, or duality³. It is not, however, that they discriminate between the principles of good and evil, or even the difference between spirit and matter, which is the duality known to other sects of the Hindus. Their distinction is of a more subtle character, and separates the Jivátmá from the Paramátmá, or the principle of life from the Supreme Being. Life, they say, is one and eternal, dependent upon the Supreme, and indissolubly connected with, but not the same with him⁴. An important consequence of this doctrine is the denial of Moksha, in its more generally received sense, or that of absorption into the universal spirit, and loss of independent existence after death. The Yoga of the Śaivas, and Sāyujyam of the Vaishṇavas, they hold to be impracticable¹.

The Supreme Being resides in Vaikuṇṭha, invested with ineffable splendour, and with garb, ornaments, and perfumes of celestial origin, being the husband also of Lakshmi, or glory, Bhūmi, the earth, and Nilá, understood to mean Devi, or Durgá, or personified matter. In his primary form no known qualities can be predicated of him, but when he pleases to associate with Máyá, which is properly his desire, or wish, the three attributes of purity, passion, or ignorance, or the Sattwa, Rajas, and Tamas Guṇas, are manifested, as Vishṇu, Brahmá, and Śiva, for the creation, protection, and destruction of the world. These deities, again, perform their respective functions through their union with the same delusive principle to which they owed their individual manifestation. This account is clearly allegorical, although the want of some tangible objects of worship has converted the shadows into realities, and the allegory, when adapted to the apprehensions of ordinary intellects, has been converted into the legend known to the followers of Kabir, of the Supreme begetting the Hindu TRIAD by MÁYÁ, and her subsequent union with her sons¹. Other

“The Lord of the Creation, by whose supremacy the world is illuminated, and who is infinitely powerful, creating and destroying many worlds in a moment, that Almighty Spirit, in his mind, contemplating the creation of a world for his pleasure, from his wishes sprung a goddess, named Itcha Sacktee; at her request, he directed her to create this world. Then the Sacktee, by the authority of God, immediately created three divine persons, generally called by Hindus the Moortee-trium, by their several names of Brahma, Vishnū and Siva, committing to them, separately, their respective charges in the expected world; Surstee, Sthutee, and Sayom, or the power of creating, nourishing, and destroying. When she had made these three lords, she requested of one after the other, that they might be her consort; but Brahma and Vishnū, disapproving of her request, she consumed them with the fire of her third eye, and proposed the same thing to Siva; then Sadaseevū, considering in his mind that legends are current amongst the MÁDHWAS, founded on this view of the creation, in which BRAHMÁ and SÍVA and other divinities are described as springing from his mind, his forehead, his sides, and other parts of his body. They also receive the legends of the Vaishnava Puráñas, of the birth of BRAHMÁ from the Lotus, of the navel of VISHNU, and of RUDRA from the tears shed by BRAHMÁ on being unable to comprehend the mystery of creation.

The modes in which devotion to VISHNU is to be expressed are declared to be three, Ankana, Náma-karaṇa, and Bhajana, or marking the body with his symbols¹, giving his names to children, and other ob-her demands were not agreeable to the divine law, replied that he could not be her consort, unless she granted her third eye to him. The goddess was pleased with his prudence, and adorned him with her third eye. So soon as Siva was possessed of that, he immediately destroyed her by a glance of the flaming eye, and revived Brahma and Vishnū, and of her ashes made three goddesses, Saraswatee, Latchmi, and Paravatee, and united one of them to each of the Trimoortee."

(Account of the Marda Gooroos.—Asiatic Annual Register, 1804.)

This legend is probably peculiar to the place where it was obtained, but the ideas and the notions adverted to in the text appear to have been misunderstood by Dr. BUCHANAN, who observes, that the MARDAS believe in the generation of the gods, in a literal sense, thinking VISHNU to be the Father of BRAHMÁ, and BRAHMÁ the Father of SÍVA.—Mysore, Vol. I, 14.

jects of interest, and the practice of virtue in word, act, and thought. Truth, good council, mild speaking, and study belong to the first; liberality, kindness, and protection, to the second, and clemency, freedom from envy, and faith, to the last. These ten duties form the moral code of the *Mádhwas.

The usual rites of worship¹, as practiced by the *Vaishnava*s of this sect, are observed, and the same festivals. In the Pújá, however, there is one peculiarity which merits notice as indicative of a friendly leaning towards the Sáiva sects: the images of Síva, Durgá, and Gáneśa are placed on the same shrine with the form of Vishnú, and partake in the adoration offered to his idol. Rites are conducive to final happiness only, as they indicate a desire to secure the favor of Vishnú. The knowledge of his supremacy is essential to the zeal with which his approbation may be sought, but they consider it unnecessary to attempt an identification with him by abstract meditation, as mean cauterised, but purified with Tapas, or ascetic mortification.—

that is unattainable¹.—Those who have acquired the regard of VISHNU are thereby exempted from future birth, and enjoy felicity in Vaikuṇṭha under four conditions, as Sáriḍya, similarity of form, Sálokyā, visible presence, Sánnidhya, proximity, and Sárshthi, equal power*.

Besides the writings of the founder, the following works are considered as forming the Śāstra, or scriptural authority, of this sect. The four Vedas, the Mahābhārat, the Pāncharātra, and the genuine or original Rāmāyaṇa.

It seems not improbable, that the founder of the Mādhwā sect was originally a Śaiva priest, and, although he became a convert to the Vaishṇava faith, he encouraged an attempt to form a kind of compromise or alliance between the Śaivas and Vaishṇavas. MADHWA was first initiated into the faith of ŚIVA at Ananteśwar, the shrine of a Linga, and one of his names, ĀNANDA TÍRTHA, indicates his belonging to the class of Daśnámi Gosáins, who were instituted by ŚANKARÁCHÁRYA; one of his first acts was to establish a Sálagrám, a type of VISHNU, at the shrine of SUBRAHMAÑYA, the warrior son of ŚIVA, and, as observed above, the images of ŚIVA are allowed to partake, in the Mádhwa temples, of the worship offered to VISHNU. The votaries of the Mádhwa Gurus, and of the Śankaráchári Gosáins, offer the Namaskár, or reverential obeisance, to their teachers mutually, and the Śringeri Mahant visits Udipi, to perform his adorations at the shrine of KRISHNA. It is evident, therefore, that there is an affinity between these orders, which does not exist between the Śaivas and Vaishnávas generally, who are regarded by the Mádhwas, even without excepting the Rámánujas, as Páshańdis, or heretics, whether they profess the adoration of VISHNU or of ŚIVA.

SANAKÁDI SAMPRADÁYÍS, or NÍMÁVATS.

This division of the Vaishnava faith is one of the four primary ones, and appears to be of considerable antiquity: it is one also of some popularity and extent, although it seems to possess but few characteristic peculiarities beyond the name of the founder, and the sectarian mark.

NÍMBÁDITYA is said to have been a Vaishnava ascetic, originally named Bháskara Áchárya, and to have been, in fact, an incarnation of the sun for the suppression of the heretical doctrines then prevalent: he lived near Briindáwan, where he was visited by a Dándi, or, according to other accounts, by a Jaina ascetic, or Jatt, whom he engaged in controversial discussion till sunset: he then offered his visitant some refreshment, which the practice of either mendicant renders unlawful after dark, and which the guest was, therefore, compelled to decline: to remove the difficulty, the host stopped the further descent of the sun, and ordered him to take up his abode in a neighbouring Nimb tree, till the meat was cooked and eaten: the sun obeyed, and the saint was ever after named Nimbárka, or Nimbáditya, or the Nimb tree sun.

The Nímávats are distinguished by a circular black mark in the centre of the ordinary double streak of white earth, or Gopichandan: they use the necklace and rosary of the stem of the Tulasi: the objects of their worship are *Kríshn*á and *Rádh*á conjointly: their chief authority is the Bhágavat, and there is said to be a Bháshya on the Vedas by Nimbárka: the sect, however, is not possessed of any books peculiar to the members, which want they attribute to the destruction of their works at Mathurá in the time of Aurengzeb.

The Nímávats are scattered throughout the whole of Upper India. They are met with of the two classes, cœnobitical and secular, or Viraktas and Grihastas, distinctions introduced by the two pupils of Nimbárka, *Keśava Bhat*á, and Hari Vyás: the latter is considered as the founder of the family which occupies the pillow of Nimbárka at a place called Dhruva Kshetra, upon the Jamna, close to Mathurá: the Mahant, however, claims to be a lineal descendant from Nimbárka himself, and asserts the existence of the present establishment for a past period of 1400 years: the antiquity is probably exaggerated: the Nímávats are very numerous about Mathurá, and they are also the most numerous of the Vaishnava sects in Bengal, with the exception of those who may be considered the indigenous offspring of that province.

VAISHNAVAS OF BENGAL.

The far greater number of the worshippers of VISHNU, or more properly of KRISHNA, in Bengal, forming, it has been estimated, one-fifth of the population of the province¹, derive their peculiarities from some Vaishnava Brahmans of Nadiya and Santipur, who flourished about the end of the fifteenth century. The two leading men in the innovation then instituted were ADWAITANAND and NITYANAND, who, being men of domestic and settled habits, seem to have made use of a third, who had early embraced the ascetic order, and whose simplicity and enthusiasm fitted him for their purpose, and to have set up CHAITANYA as the founder and object of a new form of Vaishnava worship.

The history of CHAITANYA has been repeatedly written, but the work most esteemed by his followers is the Chaitanya Charitra of BRIINDAVAN DAS, which was compiled from preceding works by MURARI GUPTA and DAMODARA, who were the immediate disciples of CHAITANYA, and who wrote an account, the first of his life as a Grihastha, or the Adi Lilá, and the second of his proceedings as a pilgrim and ascetic, or the Madhya and Anta Līlā. An abridgment of the composition of BĀINDĀVAN DĀS, under the title of Chaitanya Charitāmrīta, was made by KĀRISHNĀ DĀS about 1590: although described by the author as an abridgment, it is a most voluminous work, comprising, besides anecdotes of CHAITANYA and his principal disciples, the expositions of the doctrines of the sect: it is written in Bengali, but it is interspersed most thickly with the Sanskrit texts on which the faith is founded, and which are taken from the Brahma Sanhitā, the Vishṇu Purāṇa, the Bhagavad Gītā, and, above all, the Śrī Bhāgavat, the work that appears about this period to have given a new aspect to the Hindu faith throughout the whole of Hindustan. The accounts we have to offer of CHAITANYA and his schism are taken from the Chaitanya Charitāmrīta.

CHAITANYA was the son of a Brahman settled at Nadiya, but originally from Śrīhatta, or Silhet. His father was named JAGANNĀTH MĪŚRA, and his mother SACHI: he was conceived in the end of Magha 1484, but not born till Phalgun 1485, being thirteen months in the womb—his birth was accompanied by the usual portentous indications of a super-human event, and, amongst other circumstances, an eclipse of the moon was terminated by his entrance into the world. CHAITANYA was, in fact, an incarnation of KĀRISHNĀ, or Bhagavān, who appeared for the purpose of instructing mankind in the true mode of worshipping him in this age: with the like view he was, at the same time, incarnate in the two greater teachers of the sect as principal Anśas, or portions of himself, animating the form of ADWAITÁNAND, whilst NITYÁNAND was a personal manifestation of the same divinity, as he had appeared formerly in the shape of BALA-RÁMA: the female incarnation was not assumed on this occasion, being, in fact, comprised in the male, for RÁDHÁ, as the Púrṇa-Śakti, or comprehensive energy, and KRÍSHNA, as the Púrṇa-Śaktimán, or possessor of that energy, were both united in the nature of the Nadiya saint.

The father of CHAITANYA died in his son's childhood, and his elder brother, ViśVARÚPA, had previously assumed the character of an ascetic: to take care of his mother, therefore, CHAITANYA refrained from following his inclinations, and continued in the order of the Grihastha, or householder, till the age of twenty-four, during which time he is said to have married the daughter of VALLABHÁCHÁRYA. At twenty-four¹, he shook off the obligations of society, and becoming a Vairágí, spent the next six years in a course of peregrinations between Mathurá and Jagannáth, teaching his doctrines, acquiring followers, and extending the worship of KRÍSHNA. At the end of this period, having nominated ADWAITÁCHÁRYA and NITYÁNAND to preside over the *Vaishnava*s of Bengal, and RÚPA and SANÁTANA over those of Mathurá, CHAITANYA settled at Niláchal, or Cuttack, where he remained twelve years, engaging deeply in the worship of Jagannáth, to whose festival he seems at least to have communicated great energy and repute¹. The rest of his time was spent in tuition and controversy, and in receiving the visits of his disciples, who came annually, particularly the Bengalis, under ADWÁITA and NITYÁNAND to Nilúchal in the performance of acts of self denial, and in intent meditation on KRÍSHNA: by these latter means he seems to have fallen ultimately into a state of imbecility approaching to insanity, which engendered perpetually beatific visions of KRÍSHNA, RÁDHÁ, and the Gopís: in one of these, fancying the sea to be the Jamna, and that he saw the celestial cohort sporting in its blue waters, he walked into it, and fainting with ecstasy, would have been drowned, if his emaciated state had not rendered him buoyant on the waves: he was brought to shore in a fisherman's net, and recovered by his two resident disciples, SVARÚPA and RÁMÁNAND: the story is rendered not improbable by the uncertain close of CHAITANYA's career: he disappeared; how, is not known: of course his disciples suppose he returned to Vaikuṇṭha, but we may be allowed to conjecture the means he took to travel thither, by the tale of his marine excursion, as it is gravely narrated by KṛIŚHNA DĀS: his disappearance dates about A. D. 1527.

Of ADWAIṬĀNAND and NITYĀNAND no marvels, beyond their divine pervasion, are recorded: the former, indeed, is said to have predicted the appearance of KṛIŚHNA as CHAITANYA; a prophecy that probably wrought its own completion: he sent his wife to assist at the birth of the saint, and was one of his first disciples. ADWAIṬĀNAND resided at Śāntipur, and seems to have been a man of some property and respectability: he is regarded as one of the three Prabhus, or masters of the sect, and his descendants, who are men of property, residing at Śāntipur, are the chief Gosāins, or spiritual superiors, conjointly with those of NITYĀNAND, of the followers of this faith. NITYĀNAND was an inhabitant of Nadīya, a Rādhīya Brahman, and a householder: he was appointed especially by CHAITANYA, the superior of his followers in Bengal, notwithstanding his secular character, and his being addicted to mundane enjoyments¹: his descendants

गोपजाति आमि बडगोपसङ्गे आमि सुखपाइ ए पुलीन भोजन रहे ॥
“I am of the Gopa cast (i. e. fig.: a companion of KṛIŚHNA, the

are still in existence, and are divided into two branches: those of the male line reside at Kharda, near Barrackpore; and those of the female at Bálagor, near Sukhságar: there are other families, however, of nearly equal influence in various parts of Bengal, descended from the other Gosáins, the Kavirájas and original Mahants.

Besides the three Prabhus, or CHAITANYA, ADWAITA, and NITYÁNAND, the Vaishnávas of this order acknowledge six Gosáins as their original and chief teachers, and the founders, in some instances, of the families of the Gosáins now existing, to whom, as well as to the Gokulastha Gosáins, hereditary veneration is due. The six Gaudiya, or Bengal, Gosáins, appear to have all sattled at Bríndávan and Mathurá, where many of their descendants are still established, and in possession of several temples: this locality, the agreement of dates, and the many points of resemblance between the institutions of VALLABHA and CHAITANYA render it extremely probable that their origin was connected, and that a spirit of rivalry and opposition gave rise to one or other of them.

The six Gosáins of the Bengal Vaishnávas are RÚPA, cow-herd), and am amidst many Gopas, and such as we are, consider Pulin a delicacy."

A verse is also ascribed to him, said to have become proverbial: •

• मत्थेर द्वोऽकामिनीर कोऽ। आनन्दे तोरासवे हरिहरि बोल॥
"Let all enjoy fish, broth, and woman's charms— be happy, and call upon HARI."

SANÁTAN, JÍVA, RAGHUNÁTH BHÁTTÍ, RAGHUNÁTH DÁS, and GOPÁL BHÁTTÍ. RÚPA and SANÁTAN¹ were brothers in the employ of the Mohammedan governor of Bengal, and were hence regarded as little better than Mlechhas, or outcasts, themselves: the sanctity of CHAITANYA's life and doctrine induced them to become his followers, and as it was a part of his system to admit all castes, even Musalmans, amongst his disciples, they were immediately enlisted in a cause, of which they became the first ornaments and supports: they were men of learning, and were very indefatigable writers, as we shall hereafter see, and the foundation of two temples at Briñdávan, the most respectable reliques of the Hindu faith existing in upper Hindustan, is ascribed to their influence and celebrity². JÍVA was the nephew

² The temples of Govind Deva and Madanmohan, both in ruins; a Sanskrit inscription in the former, however, attributing it to MÁN SINH DEVA, a descendant of PÁITHU RÁO, is dated Samvat 1647, or A. D. 1591. Besides the authority of KRÍSHNA DÁS for these two brothers being cotemporary with CHAITANYA, who died in 1527, I have a copy of the Vidagdha Mádhava, of which RÚPA is the author, dated 1525; it is not therefore likely, that SANÁTAN actually founded the temple of Govind Deva, although he may have been instrumental to its being undertaken. The interior of this temple is far superior to any of the religious structures to be met with along the Ganges and Jamna, and may almost be of the preceding, the son of their younger brother: he was likewise an author, and the founder of a temple at Brindávan, dedicated to Rádhá Dámodara. RAGHUNÁTH BHÁTT and RAGHUNÁTH DÁS were both Brahmins of Bengal, but they established themselves in the vicinity of Mathurá and Brindávan. GOPÁL BHÁTT founded a temple and establishment at Brindávan, which are still maintained by his descendants; the presiding deity is RÁDHÁ RAMAÑA.

Next to the six Gosáins, several learned disciples and faithful companions of CHAITANYA are regarded with nearly equal veneration: these are ŚRÍNIVÁS, GADÁDHAR Pándit, ŚRÍ SVARÚPA, RÁMÁNAND, and others, including HARI DÁS: the last, indeed, has obtained almost equal honour with his master, being worshipped as a divinity in some places in Bengal. It is recorded of him, that he resided in a thicket for many years, and during the whole time he repeated the name of KRÍSHNA three hundred thousand times daily. In addition to these chiefs, the sect enumerates eight Kavi Rájas, or eminent and orthodox bards, amongst whom is KRÍSHNA DÁS, the author of the Chaitanya Charitámrita, and they also specify sixty-four Mahantas, or heads of religious establishments.

The object of the worship of the CHAITANYAS is considered handsome: the exterior of that of Madanmohan is remarkable for its being built something after the plan of the pyramidal temples of Tanjore; or rather its exterior corresponds with that of the temples at Bhuvanéshvara in Cuttack. As. Res. Vol. XV, plate.

KRÍSHNÁ: according to them he is Paramátmá, or supreme spirit, prior to all worlds, and both the cause and substance of creation: in his capacity of creator, preserver, and destroyer he is BRAHMÁ, VISHNÚ, and SÍVA, and in the endless divisions of his substance or energy he is all that ever was or will be: besides these manifestations of himself, he has, for various purposes, assumed specific shapes, as Avatárs, or descents; Anśas, or portions; Anśánsás, portion of portions, and so on ad infinitum: his principal appearance and, in fact, his actual sensible manifestation was as KRÍSHNÁ, and in this capacity he again was present in CHAITANYA, who is therefore worshipped as the deity, as are the other forms of the same god, particularly as GOPÁL, the cow-herd, or GopínÁTH, the lord of the milk-maids of Bríndávan; his feats, in which juvenile characters are regarded, are his Lílá, or sport.

It is not worth while to enter upon the prolix series of subtle and unmeaning obscurities in which this class of KRÍSHNÁ's worshippers envelop their sectarian notions: the chief features of the faith are the identification of Vishnú with Brahma, in common with all the Vaishnava sects, and the assertion of his possessing, in that character, sensible and real attributes, in opposition to the Vedánta belief of the negative properties of God: these postulates being granted, and the subsequent identity of KRÍSHNÁ and CHAITANYA believed, the whole religious and moral code of the sect is comprised in one word, Bhakti, a term that signifies a union of implicit faith with incessant devotion, and which, as illustrated by the anecdote of HARI DÁS above given, is the momentary repetition of the name of KRISHNÁ, under a firm belief, that such a practice is sufficient for salvation.

The doctrine of the efficacy of Bhakti seems to have been an important innovation upon the primitive system of the Hindu religion. The object of the Vedas, as exhibiting the Vedánta, seems to have been the inculcation of fixed religious duties, as a general acknowledgment of the supremacy of the deities, or any deity, and, beyond that, the necessity of overcoming material impurities by acts of self-denial and profound meditation, and so fitting the spiritual part for its return to its original sources; in a word, it was essentially the same system that was diffused throughout the old pagan world. But the fervent adoration of any one deity superseded all this necessity, and broke down practice and speculation, moral duties, and political distinctions. KRISHNÁ himself declares in the Bhágavat, that to his worshipper that worship presents whatever he wishes—paradise, liberation, God-head, and is infinitely more efficacious than any or all observances, than abstraction, than knowledge of the divine nature, than the subjugation of the passions, than the practice of the Yoga, than charity, than virtue, or than any thing that is deemed most meritorious¹. Another singular and important consequence results from these premises, for as all men are alike capable of feeling the sentiments of faith and devotion, it follows, that all castes become by such sentiments equally pure. This conclusion indeed is always admitted, and often stoutly maintained in theory, although it may be doubted whether it has ever been acted upon, except by CHAITANYA himself and his immediate disciples, at a period when it was their policy to multiply proselytes¹. It is so far observed, अथोभिरितरैरपि । सर्वं मङ्गलियोगेन मङ्गलो लभते इज्जसा । स्वर्गी-

पर्वर्गं मङ्गलम् कथम्भिर्यादि वाच्चक्षति ॥ Bhāgavat, 11th Section

¹ CHAITANYA admitted amongst his followers five Paīthāns—who purposed to attack and plunder him, but were stopped by his sanctity, and converted by his arguments: one of these, who was a Pīr, he new-named Rām Dās, another, their leader, was a young prince (a Rājakumār) whom he named Bijili Khān. CHAITANYA communicated the Upadeśa, or initiating Mantra, to them, and they all became famous Vaishnavas; पाठान् वैष्णवनि-
हैत्त तार खाति ॥ CHAITANYA uniformly maintains the pre-eminence of the faith over caste: the mercy of God, he says, regards neither tribe nor family: ईश्वरेर छपा जाति कुल नाहि माने ॥ KRISHNA did not disdain to eat in the house of Vidura, a Sūdra: विदुरेर घरे छाण करिल भोजन ॥ and he cites Sanskrit texts for his authority—as शुचिसङ्गतिदीप्तामिः दग्धदुर्जातिकल्पः । श्वपा-

प्रियः । तस्मै देयं ततो याद्यां स च पूज्यो यथा ह्यहम् ॥ “The teacher of the four Vedas is not my disciple; the faithful Chāndīla enjoys my friendship; to him be given, and from him be received: let him be revered, even as I am revered.” These pas-however, that persons of all castes and occupations are admitted into the sect, and all are at liberty to sink their civil differences in the general condition of mendicant and ascetic devotees, in which character they receive food from any hands, and of course eat and live with each other without regard to former distinctions. As followers of one faith all individuals are, in like manner, equally entitled to the Prasúd, or food which has been previously presented to the deity, and it is probably the distribution of this, annually, at Jagannáth, that has given rise to the idea, that at this place all castes of Hindus eat together: any reservation, however, on this head is foreign to the tenets of this sect, as well as of the *Rámánandi Vaishnávas*¹, and in both community of schism is a close connecting link, which should, in deed as well as word, abrogate every other distinction.

The Bhakti of the followers of this division of the Hindu faith is supposed to comprehend five Rasas or Ratis, tastes or passions: in its simplest form it is mere Sánti, or quietism, such as was practiced by the Yogendras, or by sages, as SANAKA and his brethren, and other saints: in a more active state it is servitude, or Dásya, which every votary takes upon himself; a higher condition is that of Sákhya, a personal regard or friendship for the deity, as felt by BHÍMA, • sages are from the Chaitanya Charitámrta, where many others of similar purport may be found.

ARJUNA, and others, honoured with his acquaintance. Vātsalya, which is a higher station, is a tender affection for the divinity, of the same nature as the love of parents for their children, and the highest degree of Bhakti is the Mádhurya, or such passionate attachment as that which pervaded the feelings of the Gopis towards their beloved KRISHNA.

The modes of expressing the feelings thus entertained by his votaries towards KRISHNA do not differ essentially from those prevalent amongst the followers of the Gokulastha Gosáins: the secular worshippers, however, pay a less regular homage in the temples of KRISHNA, and in most parts of Bengal his public adoration occurs but twice a day, or between nine and twelve in the morning, and six and ten at night: occasionally, however, it does take place in a similar manner, or eight times a day. The chief ritual of the Bengal *Vaishnava*s of the class is a very simple one, and the Náma Kírtana, or constant repetition of any of the names of KRISHNA, or his collateral modifications, is declared to be the peculiar duty of the present age, and the only sacrifice the wise are required to offer; it is of itself quite sufficient to ensure future felicity: however, other duties, or Sádhanas, are enjoined, to the number of sixty-four, including many absurd, many harmless, and many moral observances; as fasting every eleventh day, singing and dancing in honour of KRISHNA, and suppressing anger, avarice, and lust. Of all obligations, however, the Guru Pádásraya, or servile veneration of the spiritual teacher, is the most important and compulsory: the members of this sect not only are required to deliver up themselves and every thing valuable to the disposal of the Guru, they are not only to entertain full belief of the usual Vaishnava tenet, which identifies the votary, the teacher, and the god, but they are to look upon the Guru as one with the present deity, as possessed of more authority even than the deity, and as one whose favour is more to be courted, and whose anger is more to be deprecated, than even that of Kṛiṣṇa himself¹. We have already had occasion to observe that this veneration is hereditary, and is paid to the successor of a deceased Gosāī, although, in the estimation perhaps of his own worshippers, he is in his individual capacity more deserving of reprobation than of reverence. This blind and extravagant adoration of the Guru is, perhaps, the most irrational of all Hindu irrationalities, and it is but justice to the founders of the system to acquit them of being immediately the authors of this folly. The earliest works inculcate, no doubt, extreme reverence for the teacher, but not divine worship; they direct the disciple to look upon his Guru as his second father, not as his God: there is great reason to suppose, that the prevailing practice is not of very remote date, and that it originates chiefly with the Srī Bhāgavat: it is also falling into some disrepute, and as we shall presently see, a whole division of even CHAITANYA's followers have discarded this part of the system.

Liberation from future terrestrial existence is the object of every form of Hindu worship. The prevailing notion of the means of such emancipation is the re-union of the spiritual man with that primitive spirit, which communicates its individual portions to all nature, and which receives them, when duly purified, again into its essence. On this head, however, the followers of CHAITANYA, in common with most of the Vaishnava sects, do not seem to have adopted the Vedānta notions; and, although some admit the Sāyujya, or identification with the deity, as one division of Mukti, others are disposed to exclude it, and none acknowledge its pre-eminence. Their Moksha is of two kinds: one, perpetual residence in Svarga, or Paradise, with possession of the divine attributes of supreme power, &c. and the other, elevation to Vaikuṇṭha —the heaven of VISHNU, which is free from the influence of Máyá, and above the regions of the Avatārs, and where they enjoy one or all of the relations to KRÍSHNÁ, which have been enumerated when speaking of the followers of RÁMÁNUJA and MADHWÁCHÁRYA.

The doctrines of the followers of CHAITANYA are conveyed in a great number of works, both in Sanskrit and Bengali. The sage himself, and the two other Maháprabhus, NITYÁNAND and ADWAITA, do not appear to have left any written compositions, but the deficiency was amply compensated by RÚPA and SANÁTAN, both of whom were voluminous and able writers. To RÚPA are ascribed the following works; the Vidagdha Mádhava, a drama; the Lalitá Mádhava, Ujjvala Nilamáni, Dána Kéli Kaumudi, poems in celebration of KRÍSHNÁ and RÁDHÁ; Bahustavávali, hymns; Ashtádaśa Lílá Khańd; Padmávali, Govinda Virudávali, and its Lakshańa, or exposition; Mathurá Máhátmya, panegyrical account of Mathurá, Nátyaka Lakshańa, Laghu Bhágavat, an abridgment of the Śri Bhágavat, and the Vraja Vilása Varúnanam, an account of KRÍSHNÁ's sports in Bráindávan. SANÁTAN was the author of the Hari Bhakti Vilás, a work on the nature of the deity and devotion, the Rasámrita Sindhu, a work of high authority on the same subjects, the Bhágavatámrita, which contains the observances of the sect, and the Siddhánta Sára, a commentary on the 10th Chapter of the Śri Bhágavat. Of the other six Gosáins, JívÁ wrote the Bhágavat Sandarbha, the Bhakti Siddhánta, Gopála Champú, and Upadesámrita, and RÁGHUNÁTH DÁS, the Manasákshá and Guñaleśa Sukhada. These are all in Sanskrit. In Bengali, the Rágamaya Kóńa, a work on subduing the passions, is ascribed to RÚPA, and Rasamaya Kaliká, on devotedness to KRISHNA, to SANÁTAN. Other Sanskrit works are enumerated amongst the authorities of this sect, as the Chaitanya Chandrodaya, a drama*, Stava Málá, Stavámrita Lahari, by VIŚVANÁTH CHAKRAVARTÍ; Bhajanámrita, Śrī Smaraṇa Darpaṇa, by RÁMCHANDRA Kavirája; the Gopípremámrita, a comment on the Krishna Kariámrita, by KRISHNA DÁS, Kavirája; and the Krishna Kirtana, by GOVIND DÁS and VIDYÁPATI.—The biographical accounts of CHAITANYA have been already specified in our notice of the Chaitanya Charitámrita, and besides those, there enumerated, we have the Chaitanya Mangala, a history of the saint, by LOCHANA, and the Gaurayañoddeśa dípiká, an account of his chief disciples. The principal works of common reference, and written in Bengali, though thickly interspersed with Sanskrit texts, are the Upásanáchandrámrita, a ritual, by LÁL DÁS, the Premabhakti Chandriká, by THÁKUR Gosáin, the Páshańda Dalana, a refutation of other sects, by RÁDHÁMÁDHAVA, and the Vaishṇava Varddhana, by DAIVAKÍ NANDANA. There are no doubt many other works circulating amongst this sect, which is therefore possessed of a voluminous body of literature of its own¹.

The Vaishnавas of this sect are distinguished by two white perpendicular streaks of sandal, or Gopt-chandana, down the forehead, uniting at the root of the nose, and continuing to near the tip; by the name of Rādhā Kṛishṇa stamped on the temples, breast and arms; a close necklace of Tulasi stalk of three strings, and a rosary of one hundred and eight or sometimes even of a thousand beads made of the stem of the Tulasi; the necklace is sometimes made of very minute beads, and this, in upper India, is regarded as the characteristic of the Chaitanya sect, but in Bengal it is only worn by persons of the lowest class. The Chaitanya sectaries consist of every tribe and order, and are governed by the descendants of their Gosains. They include some Udāśinas, or Vairágis, men who retire from the world, and live unconnected with society in a state of celibacy and mendicancy: the religious teachers are, however, married men, and their dwellings, with a temple attached, are tenanted by their family and dependents. Such cœnobitical establishments as are common amongst the Rámánandis and other ascetics are not known to the great body of the *Chaitanya Vaishnava*s.

Besides the divisions of this sect arising from the various forms under which the tutelary deity is worshipped, and thence denominated Rādhāramaṇis, Rādhīpālis, Vihāriji and Govindji, and Yugala Bhaktas, and which distinctions are little more than nominal, whilst also they are almost restricted to the Bengal *Vaishnava*s about Mathurā and Brīndāvan, there are in Bengal three classes of this sect, that may be regarded as seceders from the principal body; these are denominated Spashtha Dáyakas, Kartá Bhájas and Sáhujas.

The Spashtha Dáyakas are distinguished from perhaps every other Hindu sect in India by two singularities—denial of the divine character, and despotic authority of the Guru, and the, at least professedly, platonic association of male and female cœnobites in one conventional abode¹.

The secular followers of this sect are, as usual, of every tribe, and of the Grihastha, or householder order: the teachers, both male and female, are Udásina, or mendicants and ascetics, and lead a life of celibacy: the sectarian marks are a shorter Tilaka than that used by the other Chaitanyas, and a single string of Tulasi beads worn close round the neck: the men often wear only the Kaupína, and a piece of cloth round the waist, like an apron, whilst the women shave their heads, with the exception of a single slender tress: those amongst them who are most rigid in their conduct, accept no invitations nor food from any but persons of their own sect.

The association of men and women is, according to their own assertions, restricted to a residence within the same inclosure, and leads to no other than such intercourse as becomes brethren and sisters, or than the community of belief and interest, and joint celebration of the praise of KRISHNA and CHAITANYA, with song and dance: the women act as the spiritual instructors of the females of respectable families, to whom they have unrestricted access, and by whom they are visited in their own dwellings: the institution is so far political, and the consequence is said to be actually that to which it obviously tends, the growing diffusion of the doctrines of this sect in Calcutta, where it is especially established.

The Kartá Bhájas, or worshippers of the Creator, are a sect of very modern origin, having been founded no longer than thirty years ago by RÁMA SARAÑ PÁLA, a GWÁLA, an inhabitant of Ghospara, a village near Sukh Ságar, in Bengal¹. The chief peculiarity of this sect is the doctrine of the absolute divinity of the Guru, at least as being the present Krishna, or deity incarnate, and whom they therefore, relinquishing every other form of worship, venerate as their Ishṭa Devatá, or elected god: this exclusive veneration is, however, comprehended within wide limits: we have seen that it prevails amongst the followers of Chaitanya generally, and it need scarcely have been adopted as a schismatical distinction: the real difference, however, is the person, not the character of the Guru, and the innovation is nothing, in fact, but an artful encroachment upon the authority of the old hereditary teachers or Gosáins, and an attempt to invest a new family with spiritual power: the attempt has been so far successful, that it gave affluence and celebrity to the founder, to which, as well as his father's sanctity, the son, RÁMDULÁL PÁL has succeeded. It is said to have numerous disciples, the greater proportion of whom are women. The distinctions of caste are not acknowledged amongst the followers of this sect, at least when engaged in any of their religious celebrations, and they eat together in private, once or twice a year: the initiating Mantra is supposed to be highly efficacious in removing disease and barrenness, and hence many infirm persons and childless women are induced to join the sect.

The remaining division of the Bengal Vaishnávas allow nothing of themselves to be known; their professions and practices are kept secret, but it is believed that they follow the worship of Śakti, or the female energy, agreeably to the left handed ritual, the nature of which we shall hereafter have occasion to describe.

The chief temples of the Bengal Vaishnávas, besides those which at Dwáráká and Brindávan, and particularly at Jagannáth, are objects of universal reverence, are three, one at Nadiya dedicated to CHAITANYA, one at Ambiká to NITYÁNAND and the same, and one at Agradwípa dedicated to GOPÍNÁTH: at the latter a celebrated Melá, or annual fair, is held in the month of March, at which from 50 to 100,000 persons are generally collected.

RÁDHÁ VALLABHÍS.

Although the general worship of the female personifications of the Hindu deities forms a class by itself, yet when individualised as the associates of the divinities, whose energies they are, their adoration becomes so linked with that of the male power, that it is not easy, even to their votaries, to draw a precise line between them: they, in fact, form a part of the system, and Lakshmi and Sítá are the preferential objects of devotion to many of the followers of RÁMÁNUJA and RÁMÁNAND, without separating them from the communion of the sect.

In like manner RÁDHÁ, the favourite mistress of KÍSHNÁ, is the object of adoration to all the sects who worship that deity, and not unfrequently obtains a degree of preference that almost throws the character from whom she derives her importance into the shade: such seems to be the case with the sect now noticed, who worship KÍSHNÁ as Rádhá Vallabha, the lord or lover of RÁDHÁ.

The adoration of RÁDHÁ is a most undoubted innovation in the Hindu creed, and one of very recent origin. The only RÁDHÁ that is named in the Mahá- *bhárat is a very different personage, being the wife of DURYODHANA's charioteer, and the nurse of KARNA. Even the Bhágavat makes no particular mention of her amongst the Gopis of Brindávan, and we must look to the Brahma Vaivartta Purána, as the chief authority of a classical character, on which the pretensions of RÁDHÁ are founded; a circumstance which is of itself sufficient to indicate the comparatively modern date of the Purána.

According to this work , the primeval being having divided himself into two parts, the right side became KRÍSHNA, and the left RÁDHÁ, and from their union, the vital airs and mundane egg were generated. RÁDHÁ being, in fact, the Ichchhá Sakti, the will or wish of the deity, the manifestation of which was the universe.

RÁDHÁ continued to reside with KRÍSHNA in Goloka, where she gave origin to the Gopis, or her female companions, and received the homage of all the divinities. The Gopas, or male attendants of KRÍSHNA, as we have formerly remarked, were in like manner produced from his person. The grossness of Hindu personification ascribes to the KRÍSHNA of the heavenly Goloka the defects of the terrestrial cowherd, and the RÁDHÁ of that region is not more exempt from the causes or effects of jealousy than the nymph of Brindávan. Being on one occasion offended with KRÍSHNA for his infidelity, she denied him access to her palace, on which she was severely censured by SUDÁMÁ, a Gopa, and confidential adviser of KRÍSHNA. She therefore cursed him, and doomed him to be born on earth as an Asura, and he accordingly appeared as ŚANKHACHÚDA. He retaliated by a similar imprecation, in consequence of which RÁDHÁ was also obliged to quit her high station, and was born at Bṛindávan on earth, as the daughter of a Vaishya, named VRIŚHABHÁNU, by his wife KALÁVATÍ. KRÍSHNA having, at the same time, become incarnate, was married to her at Bṛindávan, when he was fourteen, and she was twelve years of age: as a further result of the imprecation, she was separated from him after he attained maturity, until the close of his earthly career; when she preceded him to the celestial Goloka, and was there re-united with him. The following is a further illustration of the notions of RÁDHÁ entertained by this sect. It is the address of GAÑEŚA to her, in the *Brahma Vairavattra Purána, after she had set the example of presenting offerings to him.

“Mother of the universe, the worship thou hast offered affords a lesson to all mankind. Thou art of one form with Brahma, and abidest on the bosom of KRÍSHNA. Thou art the presiding goddess of his life, and more dear than life to him, on the lotus of whose feet meditate the gods Brahmá, Siva, Sesha, and the rest, and Sandaka and other mighty munis, and the chiefs of the sages, and holy men, and all the faithful. RÁDHÁ is the created left half, and MÁDHAVA the right, and the great Lakshmi, the mother of the world, was made from thy left side. Thou art the great goddess, the parent of all wealth, and of the Vedas, and of the world. The primeval Prakṛiti, and the universal Prakṛiti, and all the creations of the will, are but forms of thee. Thou art all cause and all effect. That wise Yogi, who first pronounces thy name, and next that of Kṛiṣṇā, goes to his region; but he that reverses this order, incurs the sin of Brahminicide¹. Thou art the mother of the world. The Paramātmā HARI is the father. The Guru is more venerable than the father, and the mother more venerable than the Guru. Although he worship any other god, or even Kṛiṣṇā, the cause of all, yet the fool in this holy land who reviles Rādhikā shall suffer sorrow and pain in this life, and be condemned to hell, as long as the sun and moon endure. The spiritual preceptor teaches wisdom, and wisdom is from mystical rites and secret prayers; but they alone are the prayers of wisdom, that inculcate faith in Kṛiṣṇā and in you. He who preserves the Mantras of the gods through successive births, obtains faith in Durgā, which is of difficult acquisition. By preserving the Mantra of Durgā he obtains SAMBU, who is eternal happiness and wisdom. By preserving the Mantra of SAMBU, the cause of the world, he obtains your lotus feet, that most difficult of attainments. Having found an asylum at your feet, the pious man never relinquishes them for an instant, nor is separated from them by fate. Having with firm faith received, in the holy land of Bharata, your Mantra (initiating prayer) from a Vaishnava, and adding your praises (Stava) or charm (Kavacha), which cleaves the root of works, he delivers himself (from future births) with thousands of his kindred. He who having properly worshipped his Guru with clothes, ornaments, and sandal, and assumed thy Kavacha (a charm or prayer, carried about the person in a small gold or silver casket) is equal to Viṣuṇu himself."

In what respect the Rādhā Vallabhis differ from those followers of the Bengali Gosāins, who teach the worship of this goddess in conjunction with KRÍSHNÁ, does not appear, and perhaps there is little other difference than that of their acknowledging separate teachers. Instead of adhering to any of the hereditary Gosáins, the members of this sect consider a teacher named HARI VANS as their founder. This person settled at Briñdávan, and established a Math there, which in 1822 comprised between 40 and 50 resident ascetics. He also erected a temple there that still exists, and indicates, by an inscription over the door, that it was dedicated to Śri Rádhá Vallabha by HARI VANS, in Samvat 1641, or A. D. 1585. A manual, entitled Rádhá Sudhá Nidhi, which is merely a series of Sanskrit verses in praise of RÁDHÁ, is also ascribed to the same individual. A more ample exposition of the notions of the sect, and of their traditions and observances, as well as a collection of their songs or hymns, is the Sevá Sakhi Váni, a work in Bhákhú, in upwards of forty sections. There are other works in the vernacular dialects, and especially in that of Braj, or the country about Mathurá and Briñdávan, which regulate or inspire the devotion of the worshippers of Rádhá Vallabha.

SAKHÍ BHÁVAS.

This sect is another ramification of those which adopt KRÍSHNÁ and RÁDHÁ for the objects of their worship, and may be regarded as more particularly springing from the last named stock, the Rádhá Vallabhis. As RÁDHÁ is their preferential and exclusive divinity, their devotion to this personification of the Sakti of KRISHNA is ridiculously and disgustingly expressed. In order to convey the idea of being as it were her followers and friends, a character obviously incompatible with the difference of sex, they assume the female garb, and adopt not only the dress and ornaments, but the manners and occupations of women: the preposterous nature of this assumption is too apparent, even to Hindu superstition, to be regarded with any sort of respect by the community, and, accordingly, the Sakhi Bhávas are of little repute, and very few in number: they occasionally lead a mendicant life, but are rarely met with: it is said that the only place where they are to be found, in any number, is Jaypur: there are a few at Benares, and a few in Bengal.

CHARAÑ DÁSÍS.

Another Vaishnava sect conforming with the last in the worship of Rádhá and Krishna was instituted by CHARAÑ DÁS, a merchant of the Dhúsar tribe, who resided at Dehli in the reign of the second ALEM-GÍR. Their doctrines of universal emanation are much the same as those of the Vedánta school, although they correspond with the Vaishnava sects in maintaining the great source of all things, or Brahma, to be KRISHNA: reverence of the Guru, and assertion of the pre-eminence of faith above every other distinction, are also common to them with other Vaishnava sects, from whom, probably, they only differ in requiring no particular qualification of caste, order, nor even of sex, for their teachers: they affirm, indeed, that originally they differed from other sects of *Vaishnava*s in worshipping no sensible representations of the deity, and in excluding even the Tulasi plant and Sálagrám stone from their devotions: they have, however, they admit, recently adopted them, in order to maintain a friendly intercourse with the followers of RÁMÁNAND: another peculiarity in their system is the importance they attach to morality, and they do not acknowledge faith to be independent of works: actions, they maintain, invariably meet with retribution or reward: their moral code, which they seem to have borrowed from the Mádhwas, if not from a purer source, consists of ten prohibitions. They are not to lie, not to revile, not to speak harshly, not to discourse idly, not to steal, not to commit adultery, not to offer violence to any created thing, not to imagine evil, not to cherish hatred, and not to indulge in conceit or pride. The other obligations enjoined are, to discharge the duties of the profession or caste to which a person belongs, to associate with pious men, to put implicit faith in the spiritual preceptor, and to adore HARI as the original and indefinable cause of all, and who, through the operation of MÁYÁ, created the universe, and has appeared in it occasionally in a mortal form, and particularly as KRÍSHNA at Briñ-dávan.

The followers of CHARÁN DÁS are both clerical and secular; the latter are chiefly of the mercantile order; the former lead a mendicant and ascetic life, and are distinguished by wearing yellow garments and a single streak of sandal, or Gopichandana, down the forehead; the necklace and rosary are of Tulusi beads: they wear also a small pointed cap, round the lower part of which they wrap a yellow turban. Their appearance in general is decent, and their deportment decorous; in fact, although they profess mendicity, they are well supported by the opulence of their disciples; it is possible, indeed, that this sect, considering its origin, and the class by which it is professed, arose out of an attempt to shake off the authority of the Gokulastha Gosáins.

The authorities of the sect are the Srí Bhágavat and Gitá, of which they have Bháshá translations: that of the former is ascribed, at least in parts, to CHARÁN DÁS himself: he has also left original works, as the Sandeha Ságar and Dharma Jiháj, in a dialogue between him and his teacher, SUKH DEVA, the same, according to the Charáni Dásis, as the pupil of VYÁS, and narrator of the Puráñas. The first disciple of CHARÁN DÁS was his own sister, SAHAJI BÁI, and she succeeded to her brother's authority, as well as learning, having written the Sahaj Prakás and Solah Nir-naya: they have both left many Śabdas and Kavits: other works, in Bháshá, have been composed by various teachers of the sect.

The chief seat of the Charáni Dásis is at Dehli, where is the Samádh, or monument of the founder: this establishment consists of about twenty resident members: there are also five or six similar Maths at 'Dehli, and others in the upper part of the Doab, and their numbers are said to be rapidly increasing.

• HARIŚCHANDÍS, SADHNÁ PANTHÍS and MÁDHAVÍS.

These sects may be regarded as little more than nominal. The two first have originated, apparently, in the determination of some of the classes considered as outcaste, to adopt new religious as well as civil distinctions for themselves, as they were excluded from every one actually existing. The Hariśchandís are Doms, or sweepers, in the western provinces: their name bears an allusion to the Pauránik prince *Hariśchandra*¹, who, becoming the purchased slave of a man of this impure order, instructed his master, it is said, in the tenets of the sect. What they were, however, is not known, and it may be doubted whether any exist.

SADHNÁ, again, was a butcher, but it is related of him, that he only sold, never slaughtered meat, but purchased it ready slain. An ascetic rewarded his humanity with the present of a stone, a Sálagrám which he devoutly worshipped, and, in consequence, VISHNU was highly pleased with him, and conferred upon him all his desires. Whilst on a pilgrimage, the wife of a Brahman fell in love with him, but he replied to her advances, by stating, that a throat must be cut before he would comply, which she misinterpreting, cut off her husband's head: finding SADHNÁ regarded her on this account with increased aversion, she accused him of the crime, and as he disdained to vindicate his innocence, his hands were cut off as a punishment, but they were restored to him by JAGAN-NÁTH. The woman burnt herself on her husband's funeral pile, which SADHNÁ observing exclaimed: "No one knows the ways of women, she kills her husband, and becomes a Satí," which phrase has passed into a proverb. What peculiarity of doctrine he introduced amongst the *Vaishnava*s of his tribe, is no where particularised.

MÁDHO is said to have been an ascetic, who founded an order of mendicants called Mádhavis: they are said to travel about always with a Saroda or Balian, stringed instruments of the guitar kind, and to accompany their solicitations with song and music: they are rarely, if ever, to be met with, and their peculiarity of doctrine is not known. The founder appears to be the same with the MÁDHOJI of the Bhakta Málá, who was an inhabitant of Gádágásh, but there are several celebrated ascetics of the same name, especially a MÁDHO DÁS, a Brahman of Kanoj, who was a man of considerable learning, and spent some time in Orissa and Brindávan. He was probably a follower of CHAITANYA.

SANNYÁSÍS, VAIRÁGÍS, &c.

Much confusion prevails in speaking of the mendicant and monastic orders of the Hindus, by the indiscriminate use of the terms prefixed to this division of our subject, and from considering them as specific denominations. They are, on the contrary, generic terms, and equally applicable to any of the erratic beggars of the Hindus, be they of what religious order they may: they signify, in fact, nothing more than a man, who has abandoned the world, or has overcome his passions, and are therefore equally suitable to any of the religious vagrants we meet with in Hindustan: the term Fakir is of equally general application and import, although it is of Mohammedan origin, and in strictness more descriptive of the holy beggars of that faith.

Although, however, Sannyásis and Vairágis, and other similar denominations are used, and correctly used in a wide acceptation, yet we occasionally do find them limited in meaning, and designating distinct and inimical bodies of men. When this is the case, it may be generally concluded, that the Sannyásis imply the mendicant followers of ŚIVA, and the Vairágis those of VISHNU.

The distinction thus made requires, at its outset, a peculiar exception, for besides the indiscriminate application of the term Sannyási to the Vaishnávas, as well as other mendicants; there is a particular class of them to whom it really appertains, these are the Tridañdís, or Tridañdi Sannyásis.

The word Dañda originally imports a staff, and it figuratively signifies moral restraint; exercised in three ways especially, or in the control of speech, body, and mind; or word, deed, and thought: a joint reference to the literal and figurative sense of the term¹ has given rise to a religious distinction termed Daṇḍa Grahaṇam, the taking up of the staff, or adopting the exercise of the moral restraints above-mentioned, and carrying, as emblematic of such a purpose, either one, or, as in the present instance, three small wands or staves. Tridaṇḍi designates both these characteristics of the order.

The Tridaṇḍi Sannyāsīs are such members of the Rāmānuja, or Śrī Vaishnava sect, as have past through the two first states of the Brahmanical order, and entered that of the Sannyāsi, or the ascetic life: their practices are, in some other respects, peculiar: they never touch metals nor fire, and subsist upon food obtained as alms from the family Brahmans of the Śrī Vaishnava faith alone: they are of a less erratic disposition than most other mendicants, and are rarely met with in upper India: they are found in considerable numbers, and of high character, in the south: in their general practices, their religious worship, and philosophical tenets, they conform to the institutes and doctrines of RĀMĀNUJA.

VAIRĀGÍS.

The term Vairāgī implies a person devoid of passion¹, and is therefore correctly applicable to every religious mendicant, who affects to have estranged himself from the interests and emotions of mankind. Virakta, the dispassionate, and Avadhūta, the liberated, have a similar import, and are therefore equally susceptible of a general application: they are, indeed, so used in many cases, but it is more usual to attach a more precise sense to the terms, and to designate by them the mendicant Vaishṇavas of the Rámánandi class, or its ramifications, as the disciples of KABÍR, DÁDÚ, and others.

The ascetic order of the Rámánandi Vaishṇavas is considered to have been instituted especially by the twelfth disciple of RÁMÁNAND, ŚRÍ ÁNAND: they profess perpetual poverty and continence, and subsist upon alms: the greater number of them are erratic, and observe no form of worship, but they are also residents in the Maths of their respective orders¹, and the spiritual guides of the worldly votaries; it is almost impossible, however, to give any general character of these Vairágis, as, although united generally by the watch-word of VISHNU, or his incarnations, there are endless varieties both of doctrine and practice amongst them: those who are collected in Maths are of more fixed principles than their vagrant brethren, amongst whom individuals are constantly appearing in some new form with regard to the deity they worship, or the practices they follow¹.

¹ The Rámánandi Vairágis, although indigenous in upper India, have established themselves in the Dekhan, as mentioned by BUCHANAN (Mysore, II, 76). The account he gives there of the Dakhini Vairágis is an excellent illustration of the confusion that prevails respecting the application of the term; as he has blended with the Rámánandi ascetics, who are accurately entitled to the designation, a variety of religious vagrants, to some of whom the name is rarely, and to others never applied: as Paranahansas, Digambaras, or Nágas, Úrddhabáhus, and even Aghoris; the latter are not named, but they, or similar Śaiva mendicants, are the only individuals "who extort compassion by burning themselves with torches, and cutting themselves with swords."

¹ Such are the Sítá Pádris, Ramáti Ráms, and others; also the new and scarcely yet known sects Gulál Dásis, and Daryá Dásis: mention is also made in the Dabistán, of a number of Hindu mendicants, who are no longer numerous, if ever to be encountered. It is not possible in general, however, to discriminate the classes to which they belong, as in the descriptions given by the writer, he usually confines himself to a few peculiarities of practice that afford no guide to the principles of the sect, and as in the case of the Dheríhs, he confounds the distinction of caste, or occupation with that of religious belief. Many of the vagrant ascetics whom he notices belong also rather to the Mohammedan, than the Hindu religion, as in the followers of SHEIKH BEDIA AD DÍN MEDÁR [Dabist. II, 223 ff. G. de Tassy, la religion musulmane dans l'Inde. Paris, 1831, p. 54-62.]—who, although they credit the divine mission of Mohammed, disregard the established forms of the Musalman faith, chew Bhang, and go naked, smearing their bodies with Vibhúti, or the ashes of burnt cow-dung, and twisting their hair into the Jaṭá, or braid worn by Hindu ascetics—except as professed worshippers of Niranjan, or the indescribable deity, and a belief in magic, these mendicants have little in common with the Hindu religion, or perhaps with any, although, with a facility of which innumerable instances occur in Hindustan, they have adopted many of the Hindu practices. The tomb of Sheikh Meddr is still to be seen at Makhanpur, near Firozábád, in the Doab—where, at the time of the Dabistán, an annual meeting of his disciples was held. The tomb is an

NÁGAS.

All the sects include a division under this denomination. The Nágas are of the same description as the Vairágis, or Sannyásis, in all essential points, but in their excess of zeal they carry their secession from ordinary manners so far, as to leave off every kind of covering, and, as their name signifies, go naked; there are, however, other points in which they differ from the general character of Hindu mendicants, and they are unquestionably the most worthless and profligate members of their respective religions.

A striking proof of their propensities is their use of arms. They always travel with weapons, usually a matchlock and sword and shield, and that these implements are not carried in vain has been shewn on various occasions: the sanguinary conflicts of opposite sects of Hindu mendicants have been described in several publications with the customary indistinctness as to the parties concerned: these parties are the Vaishnava and Śaiva Nágas chiefly, assisted and probably instigated by the Vairágî and Sannyásî members of those two sects, and aided by abandoned characters from all the schisms connected respectively with the one or the other¹: it would, however, be extensive building, though in decay. The Dabistán, although it contains many curious, and some correct notices of the Hindu religion, affords too loose and inaccurate a description to be consulted with advantage.

doing an injustice to the mendicant orders of any sect, to suppose that they are universally or even generally implicated in these atrocious affrays.

ŚAIVAS.

The worship of ŚIVA in the districts along the Ganges presents itself under a very different aspect from that of VISHNU, and with some singular anomalies. It appears to be the most prevalent and popular of all the modes of adoration, to judge by the number of shrines dedicated to the only form under which ŚIVA is revered, that of the Linga; yet it will be generally observed, that these temples are scarcely ever the resort of numerous votaries, and that they are regarded with comparatively little veneration by the Hindus. Benares, indeed, furnishes exceptions, and the temple of *Viśveśvara*¹ is thronged nature is recorded by the author of the Dabistán, who mentions, that in 1050 of the Hijra a severe conflict took place at Dwáraká between a set of Vaishnava ascetics termed Mūndis, from shaving their heads, and the Sannyásis, in which a great number of the former were slain [Dabist. II, 197].

¹ “The Lord of all,” an epithet of ŚIVA, represented as usual by a Linga. It is one of the twelve principal emblems of this description, and has been, for many centuries, the chief object of veneration at Káshi or Benares. The old temple was partially destroyed by the Mohammedans in the reign of AURENGZEB: the present was built by ĀHALYA BÁI, the Mahratta Princess, and, although small and without pretension to magnificence, is remarkable for the minute beauty of its architectural embellishments.

with a never-ceasing crowd of adorers. There is, however, little solemnity or veneration in the hurried manner in which they throw their flowers or fruits before the image¹; and there are other temples, the dwellings of other divinities, that rival the abode of Viśveśvara in popular attraction.

The adoration of ŚIVA, indeed, has never assumed, in Upper India, a popular form. He appears in his shrines only in an unattractive and rude emblem, the mystic purpose of which is little understood, or regarded by the uninitiated and vulgar, and which offers nothing to interest the feelings or excite the imagination. No legends are recorded of this deity of a poetic and pleasing character; and above all, such legends as are narrated in the Puráñas and Tantras, have not been presented to the Hindus in any accessible shape. The Saivas have no works in any of the common dialects, like the Rámáyaña, the Várttá, or the Bhaktamálá. Indeed, as far as any enquiry has yet been instituted, no work whatever exists, in any vernacular dialect, in which the actions of ŚIVA, in any of his forms, are celebrated. It must be kept in mind, however, that these observations are intended to apply only to Gangetic Hindustan, for in the South of India, as we shall hereafter see, popular legends relating to local manifestations of ŚIVA are not uncommon.

Corresponding to the absence of multiplied forms of this divinity as objects of worship, and to the want of those works which attach importance to particular manifestations of the favourite god, the people can scarcely be said to be divided into different sects, any farther than as they may have certain religious mendicants for their spiritual guides. Actual divisions of the worshippers of ŚIVA are almost restricted to these religious personages, collected sometimes in opulent and numerous associations, but for the greater part detached, few, and indigent. There are no establishments amongst the Saivas of Hindustan, like those of Śrináth or Puri; no individuals as wealthy as the Gokulastha Gosáins, nor even as influential as the descendants of ADWAITA and NITYÁNAND. There are no teachers of ancient repute except ŚANKARA ÁCHÁRYA, and his doctrines are too philosophical and speculative to have made him popular.

The worship of ŚIVA continues, in fact, to be what it appears to have been from a remote period, the religion of the *Brāhmaṇas*¹. ŚAMBHU is declared by MANU to be the presiding deity of the Brahmanical order, and the greater number of them, particularly those who practice the rites of the Vedas, or who profess the study of the Śāstras, receive ŚIVA as their tutelary deity, wear his insignia, and worship the Linga, either in temples, in their houses, or on the side of a sacred stream, providing, in the latter case, extempore emblems kneaded out of the mud or clay of the river's bed. The example of the Brahmins and the practice of ages maintain the veneration universally offered to the type of ŚIVA; but it is not the prevailing, nor the popular condition of the Hindu faith, along the banks of the Ganges. We shall now proceed to specify the different classes into which the worshippers of ŚIVA, as distinct from the mass of Brahmins, may be distinguished.

DANDÍS and DAŚNAMÍS.

It is customary to consider these two orders as forming but one division. The classification is not, in every instance, correct, but the practices of the two are, in many instances, blended, and both denominations are accurately applicable to the same individual. It will not be necessary, therefore, to deviate from the ordinary enumeration.

¹ See a preceding Note page 2. [The received text of Manu does not contain the śloka there quoted.]

The Dañdis, properly so called, and the Tridañdis of the Vaishnavas, are the only legitimate representatives of the fourth Āśrama, or mendicant life, into which the Hindu, according to the instructions of his inspired legislators, is to enter, after passing through the previous stages of student, householder and hermit¹. It is not necessary, however, to have gone through the whole of the previous career, as the Brahman may pass from any one of the first orders to the last at once²; he is then to take up his staff and water-pot, to derive from begging such a portion of food as is sufficient for his mere sustenance, and to devote the remainder of his day to holy study and pious meditation³.

वनेषु तु विहृत्यैव तृतीयं भागमायुषः ।
चतुर्थमायुषो भाग व्यक्ता सङ्कान्यरित्रजेत् ॥

² So MANU, as expounded by KULLŪKA BHĀŪTA, 6, 38:

प्राजापत्यां निरूप्येष्टि सर्ववेदसद्विषाम् ।
आत्मन्यमीन्यमारोद्य ब्राह्मणः प्रवर्जन्नहात् ॥
ब्रह्मचर्यादेव प्रवर्जेन्नहात्वा वनादा इति टीका ।

“Having performed the sacrifice of Prajāpati, &c. a Brahman may proceed from his house, that is, from the second order, or he may proceed even from the first to the condition of a Sannyāsi.” Indeed the intermediate stage of the Vānaprastha is amongst the prohibited acts in the Kali age.

³ Agreeably to the high authority already quoted, 6, 41, 43:

आगारादभिनिष्कातः पवित्रोपचितो मुनिः ।
समुपोदेषु कामेषु निरपेषः परित्रजेत् ॥

Adopting, as a general guide, the rules of original works, the Daṇḍī is distinguished by carrying a small Daṇḍ, or wand, with several processes or projections from it, and a piece of cloth dyed with red ochre, in which the Brahmanical cord is supposed to be enshrined, attached to it: he shaves his hair and beard, wears only a cloth round his loins, and subsists upon food obtained ready-dressed from the houses of the Brahmins once a day only, which he deposits in the small clay pot that he carries always with him: he should live alone, and near to, but not within a city; but this rule is rarely observed, and in general the Daṇḍīs are found in cities collected like other mendicants in *Maths*¹. The Daṇḍī has no particular time

उपेक्षको इशंकुसुको मुनिर्भावसमाहितः ॥

“Departing from his house, taking with him pure implements, his water-pot, and staff, keeping silence, unallured by desire of objects near him, let him enter into the fourth order.”

“Let him have no culinary fire, no domicile, let him when very hungry go to the town for food, let him patiently bear disease, let him study to know God, and fix his attention on God alone.”

कृपकेशनखशमयुः पात्री दण्डी कुसुमवान् ।
विचरित्तितयो नित्यं सर्वभूतात्यपीडयन् ॥ एककालं चरेऽप्त्वा न प्रसञ्जेत विसरे ।

or mode of worship, but spends his time in meditation, or in practices corresponding with those of the Yoga, and in the study of the Vedánta works, especially according to the comments of ŚANKARÁCHÁRYA. As that teacher was an incarnation of ŚIVA¹, the Daṇḍis reverence that deity and his incarnations, in preference to the other members of the Triad, whence they are included amongst his votaries; and they so far admit the distinction as not unfrequently to bear the Śaiva mark upon the forehead, smearing it with the Tripuṇḍra, a triple transverse line made with the Vibhūti, or ashes which should be taken from the fire of an Agnihotra Bráhman, or they may be the ashes of “His hair, nails and beard being clipped, bearing with him a dish, a staff, and a water-pot, let him wander about continually without giving pain to any being.” VI, 52.

“Only once a day let him demand food, let him not habituate himself to eat much at a time, for an anchorite habituated to eat much becomes inclined to sensual gratification.” 55.

“At the time when the smoke of kitchen fires has ceased, when the pestle lies motionless, when the burning charcoal is extinguished, when people have eaten and when dishes are removed, that is, late in the day, let the Sannyasi always beg food.” 56.

“For missing it let him not be sorrowful, nor for gaining it let him be glad, let him care only for a sufficiency to support life, but let him not be anxious about his utensils.” 57.

burnt cowdung from an oblation offered to the god¹. They also adopt the initiating Mantra of all the Śaiva classes, either the five or six syllable Mantra, “Nama Śiváya,” or, “Om, Nama Śiváya.” The genuine Daṇḍí, however, is not necessarily of the Śaiva or any other sect; and in their establishments it will be usually found that they profess to adore Nirguṇa or Niranjana, the deity devoid of attribute or passion².

आपेयमुच्यते भक्त दग्धगोमयसम्भवं ।
तदेव द्रव्यमिलुक्तं चिपुण्ड्रस्य महासुने ॥

“The ashes of fire made with burnt cowdung are the material fittest for the Tripuṇḍra.”

चिपुण्ड्रं कुरुते यस्तु भक्तना विधिपूर्वकम् ।
महापातकसङ्कर्तिमुच्यते चोपपातकैः ॥
अमन्त्रेणापि यः कुर्याद्ब्रात्वा महिमोन्नतिः ।
चिपुण्ड्रं भालफलके मुच्यते सर्वपातकैः ॥

“Whoever marks the Tripuṇḍra with ashes, agreeably to rule, is purified from sins of the first and second degree: who makes it on his forehead without the Mantras, being ignorant of its virtue, will be purified from every simple sin.” The mode of making it is thus laid down:

भुवोमध्ये समारभ्य यावदन्तो भवेद्भुवोः ।
मथमानामिकाकुरुत्वोमध्ये तु प्रतिलोमतः ॥
अकुषेण छाता रेखा चिपुण्ड्राद्वाभिधीयते ।

“Beginning between the eye-brows, and carrying it to their extremity, the mark made with the thumb reverted between the middle and third fingers is called the Tripuṇḍra.” [Vrihadbrahmottarakhaṇḍa 28, 41. 42. quoted in Catal. Codd. MSS. Sanscrit. Bibl. Bodl. I, p. 74.]

² The Dandis of the North of India are the Sannyásis, or monastic portion of the Smártas Bráhmaṇas of the South, of

The Daṇḍīs, who are rather practical than speculative, and who have little pretence to the appellation beyond the epithet and outward signs of the order, are those most correctly included amongst the Śaiva sects. Amongst these the worship of ŚIVA, as BHARAVA, is the prevailing form, and in that case part of the ceremony of initiation consists in inflicting a small incision on the inner part of the knee, and drawing the blood of the novice as an acceptable offering to the god. The Daṇḍīs of every description have also a peculiar mode of disposing of their dead, putting them into coffins and burying them; or, when practicable, committing them to some sacred stream. The reason of this is their being prohibited the use of fire on any account¹.

whom BUCHANAN gives the following account: "The most numerous class here, and which comprehends about one-half of all the Brahmins in the Lower Carnatic, is called the Smārta Sect, and its members are the followers of ŚANKARA ĀCHĀRYA. They are commonly said to be of the sect of ŚIVA, but they consider BRAHMĀ, VISHNU and ISVARA to be the same as the creator, preserver, and destroyer of the universe. They are readily distinguished by three horizontal stripes on the forehead, made with the ashes of cowdung" (BUCH. 1, 13). "The Sannyāsīs are the Gurus of this sect" (Ibid. 305); and the Daṇḍīs have great influence and authority amongst Śaiva Brahmins of the North of India.

¹ In the South, the ascetic followers of both ŚIVA and VISHNU bury the dead (DUBOIS, 56); so do the Vaishnava Vairāgīs and Sannyāsīs in the North of India, and the Śaiva Jogīs. The class of Hindu weavers called Yogīs, have adopted a similar practice (WARD 1, 201); all the castes in the South, that wear the Linga, do the same (BUCH. 1, 27).

Any Hindu of the three first classes may become Saunyási or Dañdī, or, in these degenerate days, a Hindu of any caste may adopt the life and emblems of this order. Such are sometimes met with, as also are Brahmans, who, without connecting themselves with any community, assume the character of this class of mendicants. These constitute the Dañdis simply so termed, and are regarded as distinct from the primitive members of the order, to whom the appellation of Daśnámīs is also applied, and who admit none but Brahmans into their fraternity.

The Daśnámī Dañdis, who are regarded as the descendants of the original members of the fraternity, are said to refer their origin to ŚANKARA ĀCHĀRYA, an individual who appears to have performed a part of some importance in the religious history of Hindustan; and to whom an influence has been often attributed much exceeding that which he really exercised. His biography, like that of most of the Hindu saints, is involved in considerable obscurity; but a few facts may be gleaned from such accounts as we have of him, upon which reliance may be placed, and to which it may not be uninteresting here briefly to advert.

A number of works are current in the South of India relating to this teacher, under the titles of Śankara Charitra, Śankara Kathá, Śankara Vijaya, or Śankara Dīgvijaya, following much the same course of narration, and detailing little more than ŚANKARA's controversial victories over various sects; in most cases, no doubt, the fictions of the writers. Of the two principal works of the class one attributed to ÁNANDAGIRI, a pupil of Śankara, has already been noticed¹. The other is the work of MÁDHAVA ÁCHÁRYA, the minister of some of the earliest chiefs of Vijayanagar, and who dates, accordingly, in the fourteenth century. This is a composition of high literary and polemical pretension, but not equally high biographical value. Some particulars of ŚANKARA's birth and early life are to be found in the *Kerala Utpatti, or political and statistical description of Malabar, although the work is sometimes said to have been composed by ŚANKARA himself.

With regard to the place of ŚANKARA's birth, and the tribe of which he was a member, most accounts agree to make him a native of Kerala, or Malabar, of the tribe of Nambūri Brahmans, and in the mythological language of the sect an incarnation of ŚIVA. According to other traditions, he was born as Chidambaram, although he transferred his residence to Malabar, whilst the Kerala Utpatti recognises Malabar as his native place, and calls him the offspring of adultery, for which his mother ŚRÍ MAHÁDEVÍ was expelled her caste.

In Malabar he is said to have divided the four original castes into seventy-two, or eighteen sub-divisions each, and to have assigned them their respective rites and duties. Notwithstanding this, he seems to have met with particular disrespect either on account of his opinions, origin, or his wandering life. On his return home, on one occasion, his mother died, and he had to perform the funeral rites, for which his relations refused to supply him with fire, and at which all the Brahmans declined to assist. ŠANKARA then produced fire from his arm, and burnt the corpse in the court yard of the house, denouncing imprecations on the country to the effect, that the Brahmans there should not study the Vedas, that religious mendicants should never obtain alms, and that the dead should always be burned close to the houses in which they had resided—a custom which is said to have survived him.

All accounts concur in representing ŠANKARA as leading an erratic life, and engaging in successful controversy with various sects, whether of the Šaiva, Vaishnava, or less orthodox persuasions. In the course of his peregrinations he established several Maths, or convents, under the presidency of his disciples, particularly one still flourishing at Šringeri, or Šringagiri, on the western Gháts, near the sources of the Tungabhadra. Towards the close of his life he repaired as far as to Kashmír, and seated himself, after triumphing over various opponents, on the throne of SARASVATI. He next went to Badarikášrama, and finally to Kedárnáth, in the Himálaya, where he died at the early age of thirty-two. The events of his last days are confirmed by local traditions, and the Pitha, or throne of SARASVATI, on which ŚANKARA sat, is still shown in Kashmír; whilst at the temple of ŚIVA, at Badari, a Malabar Brahman, of the Nambúri tribe, has always been the officiating priest¹.

The influence exercised by ŚANKARA in person, has been perpetuated by his writings, the most eminent of which are his Bháshyas, or Commentaries, on the Sútras, or Aphorisms, of VYÁSA. A Commentary on the Bhagavad Gítá is also ascribed to him, as is one on the Nrisinha Tapaniya Upanishad; a cento of verses in praise of DURGÁ, the Saundaryá Lahari, is likewise said to be his composition, as sometimes is the Amaru Śataka, a collection of amatory Stanzas written in the name of AMARU, a Prince, whose dead body ŚANKARA is fabled to have animated, that by becoming familiarised with sensual enjoyments he might argue upon such topics with the wife of Madana Miśra, who was more than equal to him in discussions of this nature, and was the only disputant he was unable to subdue, until the period of his transmigration had expired, and he had thence become practised in the gratification of the passions.

Although no doubt of ŚANKARA's existence or of the important part performed by him in the partial re-modelling of the Hindu system can be entertained, yet the exact period at which he flourished can by no means be determined. I have, in another place, expressed my belief that he may have existed about the eighth or ninth century¹. Subsequent enquiry has failed to add any reasons to those assigned for such an inference; but it has offered nothing to weaken or invalidate the conclusion there proposed².

1. Govinda Páda.	17. Nrisinha Bháratí Áchárya.
2. Sáṅkara Áchárya.	18. Sáṅkara Bháratí Áchárya.
3. Saundana Áchárya.	19. Nrisinha Bháratí Áchárya.
4. Surásura Áchárya.	20. Purushottoma Bháratí Áchárya.
5. Troíaka Áchárya.	21. Rámachandra Bháratí Áchárya.
6. Hastámala Áchárya.	22. Nrisinha Bháratí Áchárya.
7. Jnánaghana Áchárya.	23. Immádi Bháratí Áchárya.
8. Jnánottama Áchárya.	24. Abhinava Nrisinha Bháratí Áchárya.
9. Simbagiriśvara Áchárya.	25. Sachchidánanda Bháratí Áchárya.
10. Iśvaratírtha Áchárya.	26. Nrisinha Bháratí Áchárya.
11. Nrisinha Múrtti Áchárya.	27. Immádi Sachchidánanda Bháratí Áchárya.
12. Vítaraúá Áchárya.	28. Abhinava Sachchidánanda Bháratí Áchárya.
13. Vidyáśankara Áchárya.	29. Nrisinha Bháratí Áchárya.
14. Bháratí Kriśhna Áchárya.
15. Vidyáraṇya Áchárya.
16. Chandra Śekhara Áchárya.

This gives 27 descents from ŚANKARA. As the Mahant is elected from the disciples either by the Guru when about to die, or by the Svámálu, the spiritual chiefs of other establishments of the same sect, he is raised probably to the station in the prime of manhood, and in the ease and dignity of his sanctity has a favourable prospect of a long life. Twenty-five years to a Guru

The spiritual descendants of ŚANKARA, in the first degree, are variously named by different authorities; but usually agree in the number. He is said to have had four principal disciples, who, in the popular traditions, are called Padmapáda, Hastámalaka, Su- reśvara or Mandana, and Trotaka. Of these, the first had two pupils, Tirtha and Āśrama; the second, Vana and Araṇya; the third had three, Sarasvati, Puri, and Bhūratī; and the fourth had also three, Giri or Gir, Párvata, and Ságara. These, which being all significant terms were no doubt adopted names, constitute collectively the appellation Daśnámi, or the ten-named, and when a Brahman enters into either class he attaches to his own denomination that of the class of which he becomes a member; as Tirtha, Puri, Gir, &c.¹. The greater proportion of the ten may therefore be but a fair average allowance, and the above list comprises at that rate an interval of 657 years: at what period it closes does not appear; but the Hálañkára language is obsolete, and the work is possibly not less than two or three centuries old. This series of Gurus is so far corroborative of the view elsewhere taken of ŚANKARA's date; but as it has been extracted by a Páñhit from a work which I could not consult myself, it is by no means certain that it is correct, and I do not wish to attach any undue importance to the authority.

classes of mendicants, thus descended from ŚANKARA ĀCHĀRYA, have failed to retain their purity of character, and are only known by their epithets as members of the original order. There are but three, and part of a fourth mendicant class, or those called Tīrtha or Indra, Āśrama, Sarasvatī, and Bhārati, who are still regarded as really ŚANKARA's Daṇḍīs. These are sufficiently numerous, especially in and about Benares. They comprehend a variety of characters; but amongst the most respectable of them, are to be found very able expounders of the Vedānta works. Other branches of Sanskrit literature owe important obligations to this religious sect¹. The most sturdy beggars are also members of this order, although their contributions are levied particularly upon the Brahmanical class, as, whenever a feast is given to the Brahmins, the Daṇḍīs of this description present themselves unbidden guests, and can only be got rid of by bestowing speech; Pārvata, a mountaineer; Sāgara, an ocean; the names are always compounded with different terms. One of ŚANKARA's disciples we have seen called ĀNANDA GIRI. The famous MĀDHAVA, when he became a Daṇḍī, adopted the appellation of VIDYĀRĀNYA. PŪRANGIR has been elsewhere adverted to, and other like names occur in some of the following notes. Bhārati is the prevailing title of the latter Śringagiri Gurus.

¹ ŚANKARA and MĀDHAVA are well known by their numerous and excellent works. The chief Vedānta writers, in like manner, were Daṇḍīs; and the author of the Daśakumāra, RĀMĀŚRAMA, the Commentator on AMARA, and VIJNĀNESVARA, the Commentator on the texts of YĀJNAVALKYA, were of the same class of ascetics.

on them a due share of the cates provided for their more worldly-minded brethren. Many of them practice the Yoga, and profess to work miracles, although with less success than some members of the order in the days of the author of the *Dabistán, who specifies one Dañdadhári as able to suspend his breath for three hours, bring milk from his veins, cut bones with hair, and put eggs into a narrow-mouthed bottle without breaking them.

The remaining six and a half members of the Daśnámi class, although considered as having fallen from the purity of practice necessary to the Dañdī, are still, in general, religious characters, and are usually denominated *Atits*¹: the chief points of difference between them and the preceding are their abandonment of the staff; their use of clothes, money, and ornaments; their preparing their own food, and their admission of members from any order of Hindus. They are often collected in Maths, as well as the Dañdīs but they mix freely in the business of the world; they carry on trade, and often accumulate property, and they frequently officiate as priests at the shrines of the deities²: some of them even marry, but in that case they are distinguished by the term Samyogi from the other Atits.

The chief practices and designations of the Daṇḍis, as generally characteristic of them, have been already adverted to, but a great variety prevails in the details¹. Their philosophical tenets in the main are those of the Vedānta system, as taught by ŚANKARA and his disciples; but they generally superadd the practice of the Yoga, as taught by the followers of PATANJALI, and many of them have latterly adopted the doctrines of the Tantras. Besides ŚANKARA, the different orders of Daṇḍis hold in high veneration the MUNI DATTĀTREYA, the son of ATRI and ANASÚYĀ. By virtue of a boon bestowed upon ATRI or, according to one legend, on his wife by the three deities BRAHMĀ, VISHNU, and ŚIVA, that sage had three sons, SOMA, DATTĀ, and DURVĀSAS, who were severally portions of the deities themselves². DATTĀ, or DATTĀTREYA, was eminent for his practice of the Yoga, and hence is held in high estimation by the Jogis, of whom we are next to speak, whilst, as an incarnation of a portion of VISHNU, he is likewise venerated by the Vaishṇavas.

YOGÍS or JOGÍS.

The Daṇḍis are to the Śaiva sects what the followers of RĀMĀNUJA are to those of the Vaishṇava faith, and a like parallel may be drawn between the disciples of RÁMÁNAND and those of GORAKHNÁTH, or the *Kánphátá Jogi*s, the first pair being properly restricted to the Brahmanical order, intended chiefly for men of learning; the two latter admitting members from every description of people, and possessing a more attractive popular character.

The term Jogi or Yogi is properly applicable to the followers of the Yoga or Pátanjala school of philosophy, which, amongst other tenets, maintained the practicability of acquiring, even in life, entire command over elementary matter by means of certain ascetic practices. The details of these it is unnecessary to particularize, and accounts of them and of the Yoga philosophy will be best derived from the translation of BHOJA DEVA's Comment on the Pátanjala Sútras, in WARß's Account of the Hindus, and Mr. COLEBROOKE's Essay on the Sáṅkya and Pátanjala doctrines, in the 1st volume of the Transactions of the Royal Asiatic Society. It is sufficient here to observe, that the practices consist chiefly of long continued suppressions of respiration; of inhaling and exhaling the breath in a particular manner; of sitting in eighty-four different attitudes; of fixing the eyes on the top of the nose, and endeavouring, by the force of mental abstraction, to effect a union between the portion of vital spirit residing in the body and that which pervades all nature, and is identical with ŚIVA, considered as the supreme being and source and essence of all creation. When this mystic union is effected, the Yogi is liberated in his living body from the clog of material incumbrance, and acquires an entire command over all worldly substance. He can make himself lighter than the lightest substances, heavier than the heaviest; can become as vast or as minute as he pleases, can traverse all space, can animate any dead body by transferring his spirit into it from his own frame, can render himself invisible, can attain all objects, becomes equally acquainted with the past, present, and future, and is finally united with Siva, and consequently exempted from being born again upon earth. These super-human faculties are acquired, in various degrees, according to the greater or less perfection with which the initiatory processes have been performed.

According to standard authorities the perfect fulfilment of the rites which the Yogi has to accomplish requires a protracted existence and repeated births, and it is declared to be unattainable in the present or Kali age¹. The attempt is therefore prohibited, and the

चञ्चलेभिर्यवृत्तिलाक्षिकाषब्दजृमणात् ।

अल्पायुषात्तथा नुणां द्वेष ह योगमहोदयः ॥

“From the unsteadiness of the senses, the prevalence of sin in the Kali, and the shortness of life, how can Exaltation by the Yoga be obtained?”

Again:

न सिध्धति कल्पी योगो न सिध्धति कल्पी तपः ।

“In the Kali age, the Yoga and severe penance are impracticable.”

Yoga is prescribed in modern times. This inhibition is, however, disregarded, and the individuals who are the subjects of our enquiry endeavour to attain the super-human powers which the performance of the Yoga is supposed to confer. They especially practice the various gesticulations and postures of which it consists, and labour assiduously to suppress their breath and fix their thoughts until the effect does somewhat realise expectation, and the brain, in a state of over-wrought excitement, bodies forth a host of crude and wild conceptions, and gives to airy nothings a local habitation and a name¹. A year's intense application is imagined enough to qualify the adept², whilst inferior faculties may be obtained by even a six month's practice.

There are few Jogis, however, who lay claim to perfection, and their pretensions are usually confined to a partial command over their physical and mental faculties. These are evinced in the performance of low mummeries or juggling tricks, which cheat the vulgar into a belief of their powers. A common mode of display is by waving a Chauri, or bunch of peacock's feathers, over a sick or new-born infant, to cure it of any morbid affection or guard it against the evil eye. A trick of loftier pretence has of late attracted some notice in the person of a Brahman at Madras, who, by some ingenious contrivance, appeared to sit in the air, and who boasted of being able to remain for a considerable period under water. He and his followers ascribed the possession of these faculties to his successful practice of the observances of the *Yoga*¹.

in the practice of the Yoga, the Yogi becomes perfect after a year: of this there is no doubt." Haiha Pradipa.

In referring to the origin of this system we must no doubt go back to some antiquity, although the want of chronological data renders it impossible to specify the era at which it was first promulgated. That it was familiarly known and practiced in the eighth century, we may learn from the plays of BHAVA-BHÚTI, particularly the Málati and *Mádhava*¹, and from several of the Śaiva Puráṇas, in some of which, as the Kúrmá Puráṇa, we have a string of names which appear to be those of a succession of teachers².

of crutch, like that of a walking crutch, covering that with a piece of common hide: these materials he carries with him in a little bag, which is shown to those who come to see him exhibit. The servants of the houses hold a blanket before him, and when it is withdrawn, he is discovered poised in the air, about four feet from the ground, in a sitting attitude, the outer edge of one hand merely touching the crutch, the fingers of that hand deliberately counting beads; the other hand and arm held up in an erect posture. The blanket was then held up before him, and they heard a gurgling noise like that occasioned by wind escaping from a bladder or tube, and when the screen was withdrawn he was again standing on terra firma. The same man has the power of staying under water for several hours. He declines to explain how he does it, merely saying he has been long accustomed to do so." The length of time for which he can remain in his aerial station is considerable. The person who gave the above account says that he remained in the air for twelve minutes; but before the Governor of Madras, he continued on his baseless seat for forty minutes."—Asiatic Monthly Journal for March, 1829.

sided on the Himālaya mountains and taught the Yoga. He had four chief disciples, one also termed ŚVETA, and the others ŚVETĀŚIKA, ŚVETĀŚVA [V. L. ŚVETĀSYA], and ŚVETALOHITA. They had twenty-eight disciples—Sutdra, Madana, Suhotra, Kankana, and twenty-four others. [In the 50th Chapter of the Kurma Purāṇa, as quoted in the Śabdakalpadruma s. v. Svetal, the names of the 28 disciples are given as follows:

Of these, four, whose names are not mentioned, had ninety-seven disciples, masters of the Yoga and inferior portions of ŚIVA. Those Brahmins who recite the names of these teachers and offer to them libations acquire Brahmaridyā, or knowledge of spirit. That this long string of one hundred and twenty-five names is wholly fictitious, seems improbable, although the list is possibly not very accurate. The four primitive teachers may be imaginary; but it is a curious circumstance that the word Śveta, white, should be the leading member of each appellation, and that in the person of ŚIVA and his first disciple it should stand alone as ŚVETA, the white. ŚIVA, however, is always painted white, and the names may be contrived accordingly; but we are still at a loss to understand why the god himself should have a European complexion. [See also Weber, Ind. Stud., I, 420 ff. and Lassen, Ind. Alt., II, 1100.]

and his attendants, belong to the same sect¹; whilst the philosophical tenets of Patanjali are as ancient perhaps as most of the other philosophical systems, and are prior to the Puráñas by which they are inculcated in a popular form. The practices of the Yoga are also frequently alluded to, and enforced in the *Mahábhárata*². There is little reason to question therefore the existence and popularity of the Yoga in the early centuries of the Christian era, but whether it was known and cultivated earlier must be matter of vague conjecture alone. As represented in the Śankaravijaya (Section 41), the Yogis vindicate their doctrine by texts from the Vedas, but the applicability of the texts is there denied, and is certainly far from conclusive or satisfactory.

² These allusions occur in the Vana Parva chiefly; whilst in the Udyoga Parva [c. 38-45. Vol. II, p. 144 ff.] the observances of the Yoga are detailed at considerable length, and strenuously enjoined.

The principal mode in which the Yoga takes a popular shape in Upper India is probably of comparatively recent origin. This is the sect of Kánphátá Jogis, who acknowledge as their founder a teacher named GORAKHNÁTH, traces of whom are found in a Gorakhkshetra at Pesháwer, mentioned by ABULFAZL, and in the district and town of Gorakhpur, where also exist a temple and religious establishment of his followers. They hold also in veneration a plain near Díváráká, named Gorakhkhetr, and a cavern or subterraneous passage at Haridwár. The Sáiva temples of Nepál, those of Śambunáth, Paśupatináth, and others, belong to the same system, although local legends attached to them have combined in a curious manner the fictions of the Bauddha with those of the Brahmanical mythology¹.

From a *Goshtí*², or controversial dialogue, between KABÍR and GORAKHNÁTH it would seem that they were personally known to each other, but various texts in the Bijak allude to him as if recently deceased. In either case these two teachers may have been contemporaries, or nearly so, and the latter therefore flourished in the beginning of the 15th century. According to his followers he was an incarnation of Śiva; but in the controversial tract above named he calls himself the son of MATSYENDRA NÁTH, and grandson of ÁDINÁTH¹. MATSYENDRA NÁTH appears to have been the individual who introduced the Yoga Śaivism into Nepál: one of the works of the sect, the Hatha Pradīpa, makes MATSYENDRA prior to GORAKH by five spiritual descents², and this would place the former

The author of the Hatha Pradīpa, ÁTMÁRÁMA, states that these and many more Mahásiddhas, or perfect Yogis, are in existence. His names are possibly those of the Mahants of a particular establishment: some of them are very unlike Hindu appellatives. If the date assigned to Gorakhnáth in the text be rightly conjectured, we cannot assign much more than fifteen years to each of his successors.

in the 14th century, supposing the Kabir work to be correct in the date it attributes to the latter.

If the date assigned by HAMILTON to the migration of the Hindu tribes from Chitaur, the beginning of the 14th century, be accurate¹, it is probable that this was the period at which the worship of ŚIVA, agreeably to the doctrines of MATSYENDRA, or GORAKH, was introduced there, and into the eastern provinces of Hindustan.

The temple of GORAKHNĀTH at Gorakhpur, according to the local tradition, was founded by ŚIVA in the second or Treta age. Of its revolutions subsequent to that period no account was preserved, until it was converted into a Mohammedan mosque by AĀLĀ-ADDÍN. The temple, after some interval, was re-built in a different situation by an association of the followers of GORAKHNĀTH, and this was possibly the period at which the sect assumed its present form. A similar fate, however, attended this edifice, and it was appropriated by AURANGZEB to the Mohammedan religion. A second interval elapsed before a shrine was again erected to GORAKHNĀTH, when it was re-built on the spot on which it now stands by BUDDHĀNĀTH according to instructions communicated to him by GORAKHNĀTH in person. The present temple is situated to the west of the City of Gorakhpur, and attached to it on the south are three temples consecrated to MAHĀDEVA, PAŚUPATINĀTH, and HANUMĀN. The inclosure also comprehends the tombs of several eminent members of this communion and the dwellings of the Mahant and his resident disciples.

GORAKHNÁTH was a man of some acquirement, and has left specimens of his scholarship in two Sanskrit Compositions, the Goraksha śataka and Goraksha kalpa: third, the Goraksha sahasra Náma is, probably, of his writing. The celebrated BHARTRÍHARI, the brother of VÍKRAMÁDITYA, is said to have been one of his disciples, but chronology will not admit of such an approximation. According to the authorities of the sect GORAKH is but one of nine eminent teachers, or Náths. Of the perfect Yogis, or Siddhas, eighty-four are enumerated; but it is said, that there have been many more, of whom several are still upon the surface of the earth.

The Jogis of GORAKHNÁTH are usually called Kánpáttás from having their ears bored and rings inserted in them at the time of their initiation. They may be of any cast; they live as ascetics, either singly or in *Maths*¹. SIVA is the object of their worship—they

तुराण्ये धार्मिके देशे सुभिष्ठे निष्पत्रवे ।

एकान्ते मठिकामधे स्थातव्यं हठयोगिणा ॥ ८ ॥

"In a well-governed and well-regulated country, fertile and prosperous, the Hatha Yogi (he who upholds the world in eternal continuity) should reside in a solitary cell within the precincts of a Math." Other directions follow applicable to most establishments of a similar nature. The cell should have a officiate indeed as the priests of that deity in some places, especially at the celebrated Lát, or Staff, of BHAIRAVA at Benares. They mark the forehead with a transverse line of ashes, and smear the body with the same; they dress in various styles, but in travelling usually wear a cap of patch-work and garments dyed with red ochre: Some wear simply a Dhoti, or cloth round the loins.

The term Jogi, in popular acceptation, is of almost as general application as Sannyásí and Vairágí; and it is difficult to fix its import upon any individual class besides the Kánpahátá: the vagrants so called following usually the dictates of their own caprice as to worship and belief, and often, it may be conceived, employing the character as a mere plea for a lazy livelihood. The Jogis are, indeed, particularly distinguished amongst the different mendicant characters by adding to their religious personification more of the mountebank than any others: most of the religious mendicants, it is true, deal in fortune-telling, interpretation of dreams, and palmistry; they are also often empirics, and profess to cure diseases with specific drugs, or with charms and spells: but besides these accomplishments, the Jogi is frequently musical, and plays and sings; he also initiates animals into his business, and often travels about with a small bullock, a goat, or a small door, be neither too lofty, nor too low, be well smeared with cow-dung, and should be kept clean and free from reptiles: the Math should have a temple, a mound or altar, and a well adjoining, and be enclosed by a wall.

monkey, whom he has taught to obey his commands, and to exhibit amusing gesticulations. The dress of this class of Jogis is generally a cap and coat, or frock of many colours: they profess to worship ŚIVA, and often carry the Linga, like the Jangamas, in the cap; all classes and sects assume the character, and Musalman Jogis are not uncommon. One class of the Hindu Jogis is called Sárangihár, from their carrying a Sárangí, or small fiddle or lute, with which they accompany their songs: these are usually Bháshá stanzas on religious or mythological topics, amongst which stanzas ascribed to BHATRÍHARI, and a Pauránic legend of the marriage of ŚIVA and PÁRVATÍ, are particularly celebrated. The Sárangihárs beg in the name of BHAIRAVA: another sect of them, also followers of that deity, are termed Dorihárs from their trafficking in small pedlary, especially the sale of thread and silk, to the housewives of the villages; another class adopt the name of Matsyendris, or Machchhendris, from Matsyendra, whom they regard as their founder; and a fourth set are Bhartriharis from a traditional reference to him as the institutor of this particular order. The varieties of this class of mendicants, however, cannot be specified: they are all errants, fixed residences, or Maths, of any Jogis except the Kánpháttás rarely occurring: an observation that will apply to perhaps all the Śaiva sects, of whom it yet remains to give an account.

JANGAMAS.

The worship of ŚIVA, under the type of the Linga, it has been observed, is almost the only form in which that deity is reverenced¹. It is also perhaps the most ancient object of homage adopted in India subsequently to the ritual of the VEDAS, which was chiefly, if not wholly, addressed to the elements, and particularly to Fire. How far the worship of the Linga is authorised by the VEDAS, is doubtful, but it is the main purport of several of the *Puráñas*¹. There can be no doubt of its universality at the period of the Mohammedan invasion of India. The idol destroyed by MAHMÚD of Ghizní was nothing more than a Linga, being, according to MIRKHOND, a block of stone four or five cubits long and of proportionate thickness².

¹ Its prevalence throughout the whole tract of the Ganges as far as Benares is sufficiently conspicuous. In Bengal the temples are commonly erected in a range of six, eight, or twelve, on each side of a Gháí leading to the river. At Kalna is a circular group of one hundred and eight temples erected by the Raja of Bardwan. Each of the temples in Bengal consists of a single chamber, of a square form, surmounted by a pyramidal centre; the area of each is very small, the Linga, of black or white marble, occupies the centre; the offerings are presented at the threshold. Benares, however, is the peculiar seat of this form of worship: the principal deity VIŚVEŚVARA, as observed already, is a Linga, and most of the chief objects of the pilgrimage are similar blocks of stone. Particular divisions of the pilgrimage direct visiting forty-seven Lingas, all of pre-eminent sanctity; but there are hundreds of inferior note still worshipped, and thousands whose fame and fashion have passed away. If we may believe ŚIVA, indeed, he counted a hundred Parárdhyas in Káśi, of which, at the time he is supposed to tell this to Deví, he adds sixty crore, or six hundred millions, were covered by the waters of the Ganges. A Parárdhya is said, by the commentator on the Káśi Khaṇda, in which this dialogue occurs, to contain as many years of mortals as are equal to fifty of Brahmá's years. Notwithstanding the acknowledged purport of this worship, it is but justice to state, that it is unattended in Upper India by any indecent or indelicate ceremonies, and it requires a rather lively imagination to trace any resemblance in its symbols to the objects they are supposed to present. The absence of all indecency from public worship and religious establishments in the Gangetic Provinces was fully established by the Vindicator of the Hindus, the late General STUART, and in every thing re-

lating to actual practice better authority cannot be desired. (Vindication, Part 1st, 99, and more particularly Part 2d, 135.)

² The following is the passage from the Rauzat us Ssafá alluded to:

portion: two cubits were below ground. MAHMÚD having entered the temple broke the stone Somnáth with a heavy mace: some of the fragments he ordered to be conveyed to Ghizní, and they were placed at the threshold of the great Mosque." Another authority, the Tabakáti Akbari, a history of Akbar's reign, with a preliminary Sketch of Indian History, has the following:

لشکر بجانب هندوستان بقصد سومنات کشیده و این سومنات شهریست بزرگ به ساحل دریا محیط معبد براهمنه است و بنان در این بناخانه بسیار بودند و بت بزرگتر سومنات نامند در تواریخ بنظر رسیده که در زمان ظهور حضرت ختنی پنه مصدغی صلی اللہ علیہ وسلم این بترا از خانه کعبه برآورده بودند تا از این کتب سلف براهمنه معلوم میشود ذکر چنین است از زمان کشن که چهار هزار سال میشد معبود براهمنه است و بقول براهمنه کشن اینجا غیب نموده — القصه چون سلطان به شهر نیواله پتن رسید شهر را خالی دید فرمود تا غلبه برداشته و راه سومنات پیش گرفته چون بسومنات رسیدند اهل آنجا قلعه را بر روی سلطان کشیدند و بعد از جنک و ترد بسیار قلعه مفتوح گشت لوازم بتاریخ و غارت بعمل آمد و خانق کثیر بقتل و اسیر شد بناخانها شکسته از بیچ برکنند و سنک سومناترا پارچه پارچه کرده پاره را بگزینیں برد بدر مسجد جامع نداشته و سالیبا سنک اینجا بود

"In the year 415 (Hijra) MAHMÚD determined to lead an army against Somnáth, a city on the sea-shore, with a temple appertaining to the followers of BRAHMÁ; the temples contained many idols, the principal of which was named Somnáth. It is related in some histories that this idol was carried from the Kaaba, upon besides Someśvara, or Somanáth, which was the name of the ŚIVA demolished by MAHMÚD, were destroyed the coming of the Prophet, and transported to India. The Brahmanical records, however, refer it to the time of KRISHNÁ, or an antiquity of 4000 years. KRISHNÁ himself is said to have disappeared at this place.”

“When the Sultan arrived at Neherwáleh (the capital of Guzerat), he found the city deserted, and carrying off such provisions as could be procured he advanced to Somnáth: the inhabitants of this place shut their gates against him, but it was soon carried by the irresistible valour of his troops, and a terrible slaughter of its defenders ensued. The temple was levelled with the ground: the idol Somnáth, which was of stone, was broken to pieces, and in commemoration of the victory a fragment was sent to Ghizní, where it was laid at the threshold of the principal mosque, and was there many years.” [See also Journ. As. Soc. Bengal, VII, p. 883 ff., XII, p. 73 ff. Journal of the Bombay Branch R. A. S., II, 11-21. Asiatic Journal for 1843, May and Novbr.]

These statements shew that the idol was nothing more than a block of stone of very moderate dimensions, like the common representation of the type of ŚIVA. FERISHTÁ, however, has converted it into something very different, or a colossal figure of the deity himself, and following Colonel Dow’s version of that compiler, the historian of British India gives the following highly coloured account of a transaction which never took place. “Filled with indignation at sight of the gigantic idol, MAHMÚD aimed a blow at its head with his iron mace. The nose was struck off from its face. In vehement trepidation the Brahmans crowded round and offered millions to spare the god. The Omráhs, dazzled with the ransom, ventured to counsel acceptance. MAHMÚD, crying out that he valued the title of breaker not seller of idols, gave orders to proceed with the work of destruction. At the next blow the belly of the idol burst open, and forth issued a vast treasure of diamonds, rubies and pearls, rewarding the holy perseverance of MAHMÚD, and explaining the devout liberality of the Brahmans!” (Vol. I, 491.)

by the early Mohammedan conquerors¹. Most, if not all of them, also are named in works, of which the

¹ The twelve Lingas are particularised in the Kedára Kalpa, of the Nandi Upapuráńa [See also Śivapuráńa c. 44–61 ap. Aufrecht, Cat. Codd. MSS. Sanskr. Bibl. Bodl., I, p. 64; ib. p. 81, and Weber, Catal. p. 347, No. 1242.], where ŚIVA is made to say: “I am omnipresent, but I am especially in twelve forms and places.” These he enumerates, and they are as follow:

1. Somanátha, in Saurashíra, i. e. Surat, in its most extensive sense, including part of Guzerat, where, indeed, Pattana Somnáth, or the city of Somnáth, is still situated.

2. Mallikárjuna, or Śri Śaila, described by Colonel MACKENZIE, the late Surveyor General. Asiatic Researches, Vol. 5th.

3. Mahákála, in Ujjain. This deity of stone was carried to Dehli, and broken there upon the capture of Ujjain by ALTUMSH. A. D. 1231, — Dow. According to the Tabakúti Akbarí the shrine was then three hundred years old.

4. Omkára is said to have been in Ujjain, but it is probably the shrine of MAHÁDEO at Omkára Mandatta [Mándháttá] on the Narmadá.

5. Amareśvara is also placed in Ujjain: an ancient temple of MAHÁDEO on a hill near Ujjain is noticed by Dr. HUNTER, Asiatic Researches, Vol. 6th, but he does not give the name or form.

6. Vaidyanáth, at Deogarh in Bengal; the temple is still in being, and is a celebrated place of pilgrimage.

7. Rámeśa, at Setubandha, the island of Ramisseram, between Ceylon and the Continent; this Lingam is fabled to have been set up by RÁMA. The temple is still in tolerable repair, and is one of the most magnificent in India. The gateway is one hundred feet high. It has been repeatedly described, and is delineated in DANIEL's Superb Plates of Indian Antiquities, from which it has been copied into LANGLES' Monuments de L'Hindoostan.

8. Bhimaśankara, in Dákinti, which is in all probability the same with Bhimeśvara, a Linga worshipped at Dracharam in the Rájamahendri district, and there venerated as one of the principal twelve.

date cannot be much later than the eighth or ninth century, and it is therefore to be inferred with as much certainty as any thing short of positive testimony can afford, that the worship of ŚIVA, under this type, prevailed throughout India at least as early as the fifth or sixth century of the Christian era. Considered as one great branch of the universal public worship, its prevalence, no doubt, dates much earlier; but the particular modifications under which the several types received their local designations, and became entitled to special reverence, are not in every case of remote antiquity.

One of the forms in which the Linga worship appears is that of the Lingáyats, Lingavants, or Jangamas, the essential characteristic of which is wearing the emblem on some part of the dress or person. The type is of a small size, made of copper or silver, and is commonly worn suspended in a case round the neck, or sometimes tied in the turban. In common with the Śaivas generally the Jangamas smear their foreheads with Vibhúti or ashes, and wear necklaces, and carry rosaries, made of the Rudráksha seed. The clerical members of the sect usually stain their garments with red ochre. They are not numerous in Upper India, and are rarely encountered except as mendicants leading about a bull, the living type of Nandi, the bull of Śiva, decorated with housings of various colours, and strings of Cowrī shells: the conductor carries a bell in his hand, and thus accompanied goes about from place to place, subsisting upon alms. In the South of India the Lingāyats are very numerous, and the officiating priests of the Śaiva shrines are commonly of this sect¹, when they bear the designations of Ārādhya and *Pāndāram*². The sect is also there known by the name of Vīra Śaiva. The following account of the restorer, if not the founder of the faith, as well as a specimen of the legends by which it is maintained, are derived from the Basava Purāṇa.

10. Tryambaka, on the banks of the Gomati; whether the temple still exists I have no knowledge.

11. Gautameśa is another of the twelve, whose original site and present fate are uncertain.

12. Kedáreśa, or Kedárandh, in the Himálaya, has been repeatedly visited by late travellers. The deity is represented by a shapeless mass of rock.

According to the followers of this faith, which prevails very extensively in the Dekhan, Basva, Basava, Basvana, or Basvapa or Basavappa, different modes of writing his name, only restored this religion, and did not invent it. This person, it is said, was the son of Mādiqa Rāya, a Brahman, and Madevi, written also Madala arasu and Mahāmbā, inhabitants of Hinguleśvar Parvati Aghrahāram, on the west of Śri Śaila, and both devout worshippers of Śiva. In recompense of their piety Nandi, the bull of Śiva, was born on earth as their son, becoming incarnate by command of ŚIVA, on his learning from NÁRADA the decline of the Śaiva faith and prevalence of other less orthodox systems of religion. The child was denominated after the Basra or Basava, the bull of the deity. On his arriving at the age of investiture he refused to assume the thread ordinarily worn by Brahmans, or to acknowledge any Guru except IŚVARA or ŚIVA. He then departed to the town of Kalyán, the capital of Bijala or Vijala Ráya, and obtained in marriage Gangámbá, the daughter of the Dañḍanáyak, or minister of police. From thence he repaired to Sangamesvara where he received from Sangamesvara Svámi initiation in the tenets of the Vira Śaiva faith. He was invited back from this place to succeed his father-in-law upon his decease in the office he had held.

² This word seems to be properly Pānduranga, (पाण्डुरङ्गः) pale complexioned, from their smearing themselves with ashes. It is so used in Hemachandra's history of Mahāvīra, when speaking of the Śaiva Brahmins.

After his return to Kalyán, his sister, who was one of his first disciples, was delivered of a son, Chenna Basava, who is not unfrequently confounded with his uncle, and regarded, perhaps more correctly, as the founder of the sect.

After recording these events the work enumerates various marvellous actions performed by Basava and several of his disciples, such as converting grains of corn to pearls--discovering hidden treasures--feeding multitudes--healing the sick, and restoring the dead to life. The following are some of the anecdotes narrated in the Purána.

Basava having made himself remarkable for the profuse bounties he bestowed upon the Jangamas, helping himself from the Royal Treasury for that purpose, the other ministers reported his conduct to Bijala, who called upon him to account for the money in his charge. Basava smiled, and giving the keys of the Treasury to the king, requested him to examine it, which being done, the amount was found wholly undiminished. Bijala thereupon caused it to be proclaimed, that whoever calumniated Basava should have his tongue cut out.

A Jangama, who cohabited with a dancing girl, sent a slave for his allowance of rice to the house of Basava, where the messenger saw the wife of the latter, and on his return reported to the dancing girl the magnificence of her attire. The mistress of the Jangama was filled with a longing for a similiar dress, and the Jangama having no other means of gratifying her repaired to Basava, to beg of him his wife's garment. Basava immediately stripped Gangimbá, his wife, and other dresses springing from her body, he gave them all to the Jangama.

A person of the name of Kanapa, who regularly worshipped the image of EKAMRESVARA, imagining the eyes of the deity were affected, plucked out his own, and placed them in the sockets of the figure. SIVA, pleased with his devotion, restored his worshipper his eyes.

A devout Śaiva named Mahádevala Macháya, who engaged to wash for all the Jangamas, having killed a child, the Rája ordered Basava to have him secured and punished; but Basava declined undertaking the duty, as it would be unavailing to offer any harm to the worshippers of SIVA. Bijala persisting sent his servants to seize and tie him to the legs of an elephant, but Macháya caught the elephant by the trunk, and dashed him and his attendants to pieces. He then proceeded to attack the Rája, who being alarmed applied to Basava, and by his advice humbled himself before the offended Jangama. Basava also deprecated his wrath, and Macháya being appeased forgave the king and restored the elephant and the guards to life.

A poor Jangama having solicited alms of Kinnaráyu, one of Basava's chief disciples, the latter touched the stones about them with his staff, and converting them into gold told the Jangama to help himself.

The work is also in many places addressed to the Jainas in the shape of a dialogue between some of the Jangama saints and the members of that faith, in which the former narrate to the latter instances of the superiority of the Śaiva religion, and the falsehood of the Jain faith, which appears to have been that of Bijala Ráya, and the great part of the population of Kalyána. In order to convert them Ekánta Ramáya, one of Basava's disciples, cut off his head in their presence, and then marched five days in solemn procession through and round the city, and on the fifth day replaced his head upon his shoulders. The Jain Pagodas were thereupon, it is said, destroyed by the Jangamas.

It does not appear, however, that the king was made a convert, or that he approved of the principles and conduct of his minister. He seems, on the contrary, to have incurred his death by attempting to repress the extension of the Vira Śaiva belief. Different authorities, although they disagree as to the manner in which Bijala was destroyed, concur in stating the fact: the following account of the transaction is from the present work.

"In the city of Kalyána were two devout worshippers of Śiva, named Allaya and Madhuvaya. They fixed their faith firmly on the divinity they adored, and assiduously revered their spiritual preceptor, attending upon Basava whithersoever he went. The king, Bijala, well knew their merits, but closed his eyes to their superiority, and listening to the calumnious accusations of their enemies commanded the eyes of Allaya and Madhuvaya to be plucked out. The disciples of Basava, as well as himself, were highly indignant at the cruel treatment of these holy men, and leaving to Jagaddeva the task of putting Bijala to death, and denouncing imprecations upon the city, they departed from Kalyána. Basava fixed his residence at Sangameśvara.

Macháya, Bommidevaya, Kinnara, Kannatha, Bommadeva, Kakaya, Masanaya, Kolakila Bommadeva, Kesirajaya, Mathirajaya, and others, announced to the people that the fortunes of Bijala had passed away, as indicated by portentous signs; and accordingly the crows crowded in the night, jackals howled by day; the sun was eclipsed, storms of wind and rain came on, the earth shook, and darkness overspread the havens. The inhabitants of Kalyána were filled with terror.

When Jagaddeva repaired home, his mother met him, and told him that when any injury had been done to a disciple of the Śaiva faith his fellow should avenge him or die. When Daksha treated Śiva with contumely, Párvatí threw herself into the flames, and so, under the wrong offered to the saints, he should not sit down contented: thus saying, she gave him food at the door of his mansion. Thither also came Mallaya and Bommaya, two others of the saints, and they partook of Jagaddeva's meal. Then smearing their bodies with holy ashes, they took up the spear, and sword, and shield, and marched together against Bijala. On their way a bull appeared, whom they knew to be a form of Basava come to their aid, and the bull went first even to the court of the king, goring any one that came in their way, and opening a clear path for them. Thus they reached the court, and put Bijala to death in the midst of all his courtiers, and then they danced, and proclaimed the cause why they had put the king to death. Jagaddeva on his way back recalling the words of his mother stabbed himself. Then arose dissension in the city, and the people fought amongst themselves, and horses with horses, and elephants with elephants, until, agreeably to the curse denounced upon it by Basava and his disciples, Kalyāna was utterly destroyed.

Basava continued to reside at Sangameśvara, conversing with his disciples, and communing with the divine Essence, and he expostulated with ŚIVA, saying: 'By thy command have I, and thy attendant train, come upon earth, and thou hast promised to recall us to thy presence when our task was accomplished.' Then ŚIVA and PĀRVATI came forth from the Sangameśvara Lingam, and were visible to Basava, who fell on the ground before them. They raised him, and led him to the sanctuary, and all three disappeared in the presence of the disciples, and they praised their master, and flowers fell from the sky, and then the disciples spread themselves abroad, and made known the absorption of Basava into the emblem of ŚIVA.'—MACKENZIE Collect., Vol. 2nd. Hālakanara MSS. [pp. 3-12.]

The date of the events here recorded is not particularised, but from various authorities they may be placed with confidence in the early part of the eleventh century¹.

¹ Colonel WILKS gives the same date (Mysore, I, 506), but terms the founder Dhen Bas Ishwar, intending clearly Chenna (little) Basava, the nephew of Basava, or Basavēśvara. BUCHANAN has the name Basvana (Mysore, I, 240), but agrees nearly in the date, placing him about seven hundred years ago.

The MACKENZIE Collection, from which the above is taken, contains a number of works¹ of a similar description in the ancient Kanara dialect. There are also several works of the same nature in Telugu, as the Basaveshvara Purāṇa, Pāṇḍitādhya Charitra, and others. Although the language of these compositions may now have become obscure or obsolete, it is not invariably so, and at any rate was once familiar. This circumstance, and the marvellous character of the legends they relate, specimens of which have been given in the above account of the founder of the sect, adapted them to the comprehension and taste of the people at large, and no doubt therefore exercised a proportionate influence. Accordingly WILKS, BUCHANAN, and DUBOIS represent the Lingavants as very numerous in the Dekhan, especially in Mysore, or those countries constituting ancient Kanara, and they are also common in Telingana. In Upper India there are no popular works current, and the only authority is a learned Bhāshya, or Comment, by NÍLKANTHA, on the Sūtras of VYĀSA, a work not often met with, and, being in Sanskrit, unintelligible to the multitude².

PARAMAHANSAS.

According to the introduction to the Dwádaśa Mahá-vákyá, by a Dándi author, VAIKUNTHA PURI, the Sannyásí is of four kinds, the Kútichara, Bahúdaka, Hansa, and Paramahansa: the difference between whom, however, is only the graduated intensity of their self-mortification and profound abstraction. The *Paramahansa*¹ is the most eminent of these gradations.

a number of houses occupying a considerable space, called the Jangam Bári: the title to the property is said to be a grant to the Jangamas, regularly executed by MÁN SINH, and preserved on a copper plate: the story with which the vulgar are deluded is, that it was granted by one of the Emperors of Hindustan in consequence of a miracle performed by a Jangama devotee. In proof of the veracity of his doctrine he proposed to fly: the Emperor promised to give him as much ground as he could traverse in that manner: not quite satisfied of the impossibility of the feat, he had a check string tied to the ascetic's legs, and held by one of the attendants: the Jangama mounted, and when he reached the limits of the present Jangama Bári, the Emperor thinking that extent of ground sufficiently liberal had him constrained to fly back again.

MOOR, in his Hindu Pantheon (page 352), asserts, upon, as he says, authentic information, that the Paramahansas eat human flesh, and that individuals of this sect are not very unusually seen about Benares, floating down the river, and feeding upon a corpse: it is scarcely necessary to add that he is wholly wrong: the passage he cites from the Researches is quite correct, when it describes the Paramahansa as an ascetic of the orthodox sects, in the last stage of exaltation; and the practice he describes, although far from usual, is sometimes heard of as a filthy exhibition displayed for profit by individuals of a very different sect, those who occupy the ensuing portion of the present text—the Aghoris.

tions, and is the ascetic who is solely occupied with the investigation of BRAHMA, or spirit, and who is equally indifferent to pleasure or pain, insensible of heat or cold, and incapable of satiety or want*.

Agreeably to this definition, individuals are sometimes met with who pretend to have attained such a degree of perfection: in proof of it they go naked in all weathers, never speak, and never indicate any natural want: what is brought to them as alms or food, by any person, is received by the attendants, whom their supposed sanctity or a confederation of interest attaches to them, and by these attendants they are fed and served on all occasions, as if they were as helpless as infants. It may be supposed that, not unfrequently, there is much knavery in this helplessness, but there are many Hindus whose simple enthusiasm induces them honestly to practice such self-denial, and there is little risk in the attempt, as the credulity of their countrymen, or rather countrywomen, will in most places take care that their wants are amply supplied. These devotees are usually included amongst the Śaiva ascetics; but it may be doubted whether the classification is correct.

AGHORÍS.

The pretended insensibility of the Paramahansa being of a passive nature is at least inoffensive, and even where it is mere pretence the retired nature of the practice renders the deception little conspicuous or revolting. The same profession of worldly indifference characterises the Aghori, or Aghorapanthi; but he seeks occasions for its display, and demands alms as a reward for its exhibition.

The original Aghori worship seems to have been that of Devi in some of her terrific forms, and to have required even human victims for its performance¹. In imitation of the formidable aspect under which the goddess was worshipped, the appearance of her votary was rendered as hideous as possible, and his wand and water-pot were a staff set with bones and the upper half of a skull: the practices were of a similar nature, and flesh and spirituous liquors constituted, at will, the diet of the adept.

The regular worship of this sect has long since been suppressed, and the only traces of it now left are presented by a few disgusting wretches, who, whilst they profess to have adopted its tenets, make them a mere plea for extorting alms. In proof of their indifference to worldly objects, they eat and drink whatever is given to them, even ordure and carrion. They smear their bodies also with excrement, and carry it about with them in a wooden cup, or skull, either to swallow it, if by so doing they can get a few pice; or to throw it upon the persons, or into the houses of those who refuse to comply with their demands. They also for the same purpose inflict gashes on their limbs, that the crime of blood may rest upon the head of the recusants; and they have a variety of similar disgusting devices to extort money from the timid and credulous Hindu. They are fortunately not numerous, and are universally detested and feared.

ÚRDDHABÁHUS, ÁKÁŚ MUKHÍS, and NAKHÍS.

Personal privation and torture being of great efficacy in the creed of the Hindus, various individuals, some influenced by credulity, and some by knavery, have adopted modes of distorting their limbs, and forcing them out of their natural position, until they can no longer resume their ordinary direction.

The *Úrddhabáhus*¹ extend one or both arms above their heads, till they remain of themselves thus elevated. They also close the fist, and the nails being necessarily suffered to grow make their way between the metacarpal bones, and completely perforate the hand. The Urdhabáhus are solitary mendicants, as are all of this description, and never have any fixed abode: they subsist upon alms; many of them go naked, but some wear a wrapper stained with ochre; they usually assume the Śaiva marks, and twist their hair so as to project from the forehead, in imitation of the Jatá of Siva.

The *Ākāśmukhis*¹ hold up their faces to the sky, till the muscles of the back of the neck become contracted, and retain it in that position: they wear the Jatá, and allow the beard and whiskers to grow, smearing the body with ashes: some wear coloured garments: they subsist upon alms.

The Nakhis are of a similar description with the two preceding, but their personal characteristic is of a less extravagant nature, being confined to the length of their finger nails, which they never cut: they also live by begging, and wear the Śaiva marks.

GÚDARAS.

The Gúdaras are so named from a pan of metal which they carry about with them, and in which they have a small fire, for the purpose of burning scented woods at the houses of the persons from whom they receive alms. These alms they do not solicit further than by repeating the word *Alakh*², expressive of the indescribable nature of the deity. They have a peculiar garb, wearing a large round cap, and a long frock or coat stained with ochery clay. Some also wear ear-rings, like the Kánpáhátá Jogis, or a cylinder of wood passed through the lobe of the ear, which they term the Khechari Mudrá, the seal or symbol of the deity, of him who moves in the heavens.

RÚKHARAS, SÚKHARAS, and ÚKHARAS.

The Súkharas are Śaiva mendicants, distinguished by carrying a stick three spans in length: they dress in a cap and sort of petticoat stained with ochery earth, smear their bodies with ashes, and wear ear-rings of the Rudráksha seed. They also wear over the left shoulder a narrow piece of cloth dyed with ochre, and twisted, in place of the Zannár.

The Rúkharas are of similar habits and appearance, but they do not carry the stick, nor wear the Rudráksha ear-rings, but in their place metallic ones: these two classes agree with the preceding in the watchword, exclaiming Alakh, as they pass along; the term is, however, used by other classes of mendicants.

The Úkharas are said to be members of either of the preceding classes, who drink spirituous liquors, and eat meat: they appear to be the refuse of the three preceding mendicant classes, who, in general, are said to be of mild and inoffensive manners.

KARÁ LINGÍS.

These are vagabonds of little credit; except some-tjmes amongst the most ignorant portions of the community, they are not often met with: they go naked, and to mark their triumph over sensual desires, affix an iron ring and chain on the male organ¹: they are professedly worshippers of SIVA.

SANNYÁSÍS, BRAHMACHÁRÍS, and AVADHÚTAS.

Although the terms Sannyási and Vairágí are, in a great measure, restricted amongst the Vaishnávas to peculiar classes, the same limit can scarcely be adopted with regard to the Śaivas. All the sects, except the Samyogi Atíts, are so far Sannyási, or excluded from the world, as not to admit of married teachers, a circumstance far from uncommon, as we have seen amongst the more refined followers of VISHNU. Most of the Śaiva sects, indeed, are of a very inferior description to those of the Vaishnávas.

Besides the individuals who adopt the Dańda Gráhána, and are unconnected with the *Daśnámí*s, there is a set of devotees who remain through life members of the condition of the Brahmachári, or student²:

¹ These ascetics were the persons who attracted the notice of the earlier travellers, especially BERNIER and TAVERNIER. They were more numerous then, probably, than they are at present, and this appears to be the case with most of the mendicants who practiced on the superstitious admiration of the vulgar.

² The Dírghakála Brahmacharyam, or protracted period of studentship, is however amongst the acts enumerated in various authorities of indisputable character, as those which are prohibited in the Kali age.

these are also regarded as Sannyásis, and where the term is used in a definite sense, these twelve kinds, the Dañdis, Brahmacháris, and ten Daśnámi orders are implied. In general, however, the term, as well as Avadhúta, or Avdhauta, and Alakhnámi, express all the Śaiva classes of mendicants, except perhaps the Jogis.

NÁGAS.

The Śaiva Sannyásis who go naked are distinguished by this term. They smear their bodies with ashes, allow their hair, beards, and whiskers to grow, and wear the projecting braid of hair, called the Jatá; like the Vairágí Nágas, they carry arms, and wander about in troops, soliciting alms, or levying contributions. The Śaiva Nágas are chiefly the refuse of the Dandi and Atit orders, or men who have no inclination for a life of study or business: when weary of the vagrant and violent habits of the Nága, they re-enter the better disposed classes, which they had first quitted. The Śaiva Nágas are very numerous in many parts of India, though less so in the Company's provinces than in any other: they were formerly in great numbers in *Búndelkhańd*¹, and HIMMET

¹ A party of them attacked Colonel GODDARD's troops in their march between Dorával and Herapur, the assailants were no more than four or five hundred, but about two thousand hovered about the rear of the army: they are called Pándáram in the narrative, but were evidently Śaiva Nágas. PENNANT's Hindustan, 2, 192. The Vindicator of the Hindus, speaking of

BAHÁDUR was a pupil of one of their Mahants, RÁ-JENDRA GÍR, one of the lapsed Daśnámi ascetics. These Nágas are the particular opponents of the Vairágí Nágas, and were, no doubt, the leading actors in the bloody fray at *Haridwár*¹, which had excluded the Vaishnávas from the great fair there, from 1760, till the British acquired the country. The leader of the Śaiva party was called DHOKAL GÍR, and he, as well as the spiritual guide of HIMMET BAHÁDUR, was consequently of the Daśnámi order, which would thus seem to be addicted to violent and war-like habits. With respect to the sanguinary affray at Haridwár, in which we are told eighteen thousand Vairágis were left dead on the field, there is a different legend current of the origin of the conflict from that given in the Researches, but neither of them is satisfactory, nor indeed is any particular cause necessary, as the opposite objects of worship, and the pride of them, observes, that they often engage in the rival contests of the Indian Chiefs, and, on a critical occasion some years ago, six thousand of them joined the forces of the Mahratta Chief SINDIAH, and enabled him, with an equal number of his own troops, to discomfit an army of thirty thousand men, headed by one of his rebellious subjects.

¹ As. Res. II, 455. It may be observed, that a very accurate account is given in the same place of the general appearance and habits of the Śaiva Sannyásis and Jogis, the Vaishnava Vairágis, and Uddásis of Nánaksháh. The term Gosdín, as correlative to Sannyásí, is agreeable to common usage, but, as has been elsewhere observed, is more strictly applicable to very different characters.

strength and numbers, and consequent struggle for pre-eminence are quite sufficient to account for the dispute¹.

ŚÁKTAS.

The worshippers of the ŚAKTI, the power or energy of the divine nature in action, are exceedingly numerous amongst all classes of Hindus². This active energy is, agreeably to the spirit of the mythological system, personified, and the form with which it is invested, considered as the especial object of veneration, de-

RAMAINÍ 69.

ऐसा धोगे न देखा भाई ।

भुल किरे लिये गफलाई, &c.

“I never beheld such a Jogi, oh brother! forgetting his doctrine he roves about in negligence. He follows professedly the faith of MAHĀDEVA, and calls himself an eminent teacher; the scene of his abstraction is the fair or market. MĀYĀ is the mistress of the false saint. When did DATTĀTREYA demolish a dwelling? when did ŚUKADEVA collect an armed host? when did NĀRADA mount a matchlock? when did VYĀSADEVA blow a trumpet? In making war, the creed is violated. Is he an Atit, who is armed with a quiver? Is he a Virakta, who is filled with covetousness? His garb is put to shame by his gold ornaments; he has assembled horses and mares, is possessed of villages, is called a man of wealth; a beautiful woman was not amongst the embellishments of Sanaka and his brethren; he who carries with him a vessel of ink, cannot avoid soiling his raiment.”

² It has been computed, that of the Hindus of Bengal at least three-fourths are of this sect: of the remaining fourth three parts are Vaishṇavas, and one Śaivas, &c.

pends upon the bias entertained by the individuals towards the adoration of VISHNU or SIVA. In the former case the personified Śakti is termed LAKSHMÍ, or MAHÁ LAKSHMÍ, and in the latter, PÁRVATÍ, BHAVÁNÍ, or DURGÁ. Even SARASVATÍ enjoys some portion of homage, much more than her lord, BRAHMÁ, whilst a vast variety of inferior beings of malevolent character and formidable aspect receive the worship of the multitude. The bride of SIVA however, in one or other of her many and varied forms, is by far the most popular emblem in Bengal and along the Ganges.

The worship of the female principle, as distinct from the divinity, appears to have originated in the literal interpretation of the metaphorical language of the Vedas, in which the will or purpose to create the universe is represented as originating from the creator, and co-existent with him as his bride, and part of himself. Thus in the Rig Veda it is said "That divine spirit breathed without affliction, single with (Svadhá) her who is sustained within him; other than him nothing existed. First desire was formed in his mind, and that became the original productive seed"¹, and the Sáma Veda, speaking of the divine cause of creation, says, "He felt not delight, being alone. He wished another, and instantly became such. He caused his own self to fall in twain, and thus became husband and wife. He approached her, and thus were human beings produced”¹. In these passages it is not unlikely that reference is made to the primitive tradition of the origin of mankind, but there is also a figurative representation of the first indication of wish or will in the Supreme Being. Being devoid of all qualities whatever, he was alone, until he permitted the wish to be multiplied, to be generated within himself. This wish being put into action, it is said, became united with its parent, and then created beings were produced. Thus this first manifestation of divine power is termed Ichchhárúpa, personified desire, and the creator is designated as *Svechchhámaya*², united with his own will, whilst in the Vedánta philosophy, and the popular sects, such as that of KABÍR, and others, in which all created things are held to be illusory, the Sakti, or active will of the deity, is always designated

² Thus, in the Brahma Vaivartta Purána, which has a whole section dedicated to the manifestations of the female principle, or a Prakrítî Khańda:

एवंहृषं विभद्धगवानेक एव सः ।
दिविभूत्य नभसा सार्वं शून्यं विश्वं ददर्श ह ॥
आत्मोच्य मनसा सर्वमेकमेवासहायवाह् ।
खेच्छ्या स्तृप्तमारेभे सृष्टिं खेच्छामयः प्रभुः ॥

“The Lord was alone invested with the Supreme form, and beheld the whole world, with the sky and regions of space, a void. Having contemplated all things in his mind, he, without any assistant, began with the will to create all things,—He, the Lord, endowed with the wish for creation.”

and spoken of as Máyá or Mahámáyá, original deceit or illusion¹.

Another set of notions of some antiquity which contributed to form the character of the Sakti, whether general or particular, were derived from the Sáṃkhya philosophy. In this system nature, Prakṛiti, or Mūla Prakṛiti, is defined to be of eternal existence and independent origin, distinct from the supreme spirit, productive though no production, and the plastic origin of all things, including even the gods. Hence Prakṛiti has come to be regarded as the mother of gods and men, whilst as one with matter, the source of error, it is again identified with Máyá, or delusion, and as co-existent with the supreme as his Sakti, his personified energy, or his bride².

सा च ब्रह्मस्वरूपा माया नित्या सनातनी ।

“She (Prakṛiti) one with Brahma is Máyá, eternal, everlasting;” and in the Káliká Puráńa

अभिन्ना प्रकृतिर्या सा जनून्समोहिति ।

Prakṛiti is termed “Inherent Máyá, because she beguiles all beings.”

² In the Gitá [VII, 4] Prakṛiti is identified with all the elementary predicates of matter:

भूमिरापो चक्षु वायुः खं मनो बुद्धिरेव च ।

अहंकार इतीयं मे भिन्ना प्रकृतिरष्टधा ॥

“This, my Prakṛiti, is inherently eight-fold, or earth, water, fire, air, ether, mind, intellect, individuality.”

So also the Kurma Puráńa (Chapter 12):

तत्त्वं सर्वजगन्मूर्तिः शक्तिर्मायेति विश्वता ।

तदेवं भासयेदीशो मायावी पुरुषोत्तमः ॥

These mythological fancies have been principally disseminated by the Puráñas, in all which Prakrīti, or Máyá, bears a prominent part. The aggregate of the whole is given in the Brahma Vaivartta Purána, one section of which, the Prakrīti Khańda, is devoted to the subject, and in which the legends relating to the principal modifications of the female principle are narrated.

According to this authority, BRAHMA, or the supreme being, having determined to create the universe by his super-human power, became twofold, the right half becoming a male, the left half a female, which was Prakrīti. She was of one nature with BRAHMA. She was illusion, eternal and without end: as is the soul, so is its active energy; as the faculty of burning is in fire¹. In another passage it is said, that KRÍSHNA, who is in this work identified with the Supreme, being alone invested with the divine nature, beheld all one universal blank, and contemplating creation with his

सैषा मायात्मिका शक्तिः सर्वाकारा सनातनी ।

“His Energy, being the universal form of all the world, is called Máyá, for so does the Lord the best of males and endowed will illusion cause it to revolve. That Śakti, of which the essence is illusion, is omniform and eternal, and constantly displays the universal shape of Mahéśa.”

१ योगेनात्मा सुष्टिविधौ द्विधारूपो बभूव सः ।

mental vision, he began to create all things by his own will, being united with his will, which became manifest as MÚLA PRAKRÍTI¹. The original PRAKRÍTI first assumed five forms²—DURGÁ the bride, Śakti, and MÁyá, of ŚIVA, LAKSHMÍ the bride, Śakti and MÁyá of VISHNÚ, SARASWATÍ the same of BRAHMÁ, or in the Brahma Vaivartta Purána, of HARI, whilst the next, SÁVITRÍ is the bride of BRAHMÁ. The fifth division of the original Prakrīti, was RÁDHÁ, the favourite of the youthful KRÍSHNÁ, and unquestionably a modern intruder into the Hindu Pantheon.

Besides these more important manifestations of the female principle, the whole body of goddesses and nymphs of every order are said to have sprung from the same source, and indeed every creature, whether human or brutal, of the female sex, is referred to the same principle, whilst the origin of males is ascribed to the primitive Purusha, or male. In every creation of the universe it is said the MÚLA PRAKRÍTI assumes the different gradations of Anśarúpiṇí, Kalárúpiṇí, *Kalánśarúpiṇí*³, or manifest herself in portions, parts,

सार्विर्बभूत्व सहसा मूलप्रकृतिरीश्वरी ॥

“From the wish which was the creative impulse of Śri KRISHNÁ, endowed with his will, she, Mula Prakrīti, the Supreme, became manifest.” [ibid. sl. 12.]

² तदाश्रया पञ्चविधा सृष्टिकर्मविभेदतः ।

“And she (the Mula Prakrīti,) became in the act of creation five-fold by the will of the Supreme.” [sl. 13.]

and portions of parts, and further subdivisions. The chief Anśas are, besides the five already enumerated, GANGÁ, TULASÍ, MANASÁ, SHASHTHÍ, or DEVASENÁ, MANGALACHAÑDÍKÁ, and KÁLÍ*; the principal Kalás are SWÁHÁ, SWADHÁ, DAKSHINÁ, SWASTI, PUSHТИ, TUSHТИ, and others, most of which are allegorical personifications, as Dhriti, Fortitude, Pratishthá, Fame, and Adharma, Wickedness, the bride of Mṛityu, or Death. ADITI, the mother of the Gods, and DITI, the mother of the Demons, are also Kalás of PRAKRITI. The list includes all the secondary goddesses. The Kalánśas and Anśánśas, or sub-divisions of the more important manifestations, are all womankind, who are distinguished as good, middling, or bad, according as they derive their being from the parts of their great original in which the Satya, Rajas, and Tamo Guṇa, or property of goodness, passion, and vice predominates. At the same time as manifestations of the great cause of all they are entitled to respect, and even to veneration: whoever, says the Brahma Vaivartta Purána, offends or insults a female, incurs the wrath of PRAKRITI, whilst he who propitiates a female, particularly the youthful daughter of a Brahman, with clothes, ornaments and perfumes, offers worship to PRAKRITI herself. It is in the spirit of this last doctrine that one of the principal rites of the Sáktas is the actual worship of the daughter or wife of a Brahman, and leads with one branch of the sect at least to the introduction of gross impurities. But besides this derivation of PRAKRÍTI, or SAKTI, from the Supreme, and the secondary origin of all female nature from her, those who adopt her as their especial divinity employ the language invariably addressed towards the preferential object of worship in every sect, and contemplate her as comprising all existence in her essence. Thus she is not only declared to be one with the male deity, of whose energy some one of her manifestations is the type, as DEVÍ with SÍVA, and LAKSHMÍ with VISHNU; but it is said, that she is equally in all things, and that all things are in her, and that besides her there is nothing¹.

"In every creation of the universe the Devi, through divine Yoga, assumes different forms, and becomes Anśarípá, Kaláripá, and Kalánśarípá, or Anśánśarípá."

Although the adoration of PRAKRÍTI or SAKTI is, to a certain extent, authorised by the Purárias, particularly the Brahma Vaivartta, the Skanda, and the Kālikā, yet the principal rites and formulæ are derived from an independent series of works known by the collective term of Tantras. These are infinitely numerous, and in some instances of great extent; they always assume the form of a dialogue between ŚIVA and his bride, in one of her many forms, but mostly as UMĀ and PĀRVATI, in which the goddess questions the god as to the mode of performing various ceremonies, and the prayers and incantations to be used in them. These he explains at length, and under solemn cautions that they involve a great mystery on no account whatever to be divulged to the profane.

सर्वमन्त्रमयी त्वं ब्रह्माद्यास्त्वत्समुद्भवाः ।

“Thou art predicated in every prayer — Brahmá and the rest are all born from thee. Thou art one with the four objects of life, and from thee they come to fruit. From thee this whole universe proceeds, and in thee, asylum of the world, all is, whether visible or invisible, gross or subtle in its nature: what is, thou art in the Sakti form, and except thee nothing has ever been.”

The followers of the Tantras profess to consider them as a fifth Veda, and attribute to them equal antiquity and superior authority¹. The observances they prescribe have, indeed, in Bengal almost superseded the original ritual. The question of their date is in-

मम पञ्चमुखेभ्यश्च पञ्चान्नाया विनिर्गताः ।
पूर्वश्च पश्चिमश्चैव दक्षिणश्चोत्तरश्चाथा ॥
जङ्गान्नायश्च पश्चिते मोक्षमार्गाः प्रकीर्तिताः ।

[See Aufrecht, Catal. I, p. 91.]

“The five Scriptures issued from my five mouths, and were the east, west, south, north, and upper. These five are known as the paths to final liberation. There are many Scriptures, but none are equal to the Upper Scripture.” Kullūka Bhaṭṭa, commenting on the first verse of the second chapter of Manu, says: the Śruti is two-fold—Vaidika and Tāntrika:

श्रुतिश्च द्विविधा वैदिकी तान्त्रिकी च ॥

volved in considerable obscurity. From the practices described in some of the Puráñas, particularly that of the Dikshá or rite of initiation, in the Agni Púráña, from the specification of formulæ comprising the mystical monosyllables of the Tántras in that and other similar compilations, and from the citation of some of them by name in different Pauránic works¹, we must conclude that some of the Tantras are prior to those authorities. But the date of the Puráñas themselves is far from determined, and whilst some parts of them may be of considerable antiquity, other portions of most, if not of all, are undoubtedly subsequent to the tenth century of the Christian era. It is not unlikely, however, that several of the Tantras are of earlier composition, especially as we find the system they inculcate included by ÁNANDAGIRI, in his life of ŚĀNKARĀCHĀRYA, amongst the heterodoxies which that Legislator succeeded in confuting. On the other hand there appears no indication of Tántrika notions in the ¹ As in the Kúrma Puráña the Kapdla, Bhairava, Váma and Yámala, and the Páncharátra in the Vardha: we have also a number mentioned in the Śankara Vijaya, of both Ánandagiri and Mādhaba, as the Śiva Gítá, Śiva Sanhitá, Rudra Yámala, and Śiva Rahasya. It is also said in Ánandagiri's work, that the Bráhmaṇas were cursed by Gáyatri, to become Tántrikas in the Kali age:

वेदोक्तकर्महीनाश्च तान्त्रिकाचारतत्पराः ।

यूर्ध्वं कलौ भवन्त्वेवमिति तानाह सा वृष्टा ॥

“She being angry said to them: in the Kali age, after abandoning the Veda ritual, become followers of the Tántrika observances,”

Mahábhárát, and the name of Tantra, in the sense of a religious text book, does not occur in the vocabulary of AMARA SINHA. It may therefore be inferred, that the system originated at some period in the early centuries of Christianity, being founded on the previous worship of the female principle, and the practices of the Yoga with the Mantras, or mystical formulæ of the Vedas. It is equally certain that the observances of the Tantras have been carried to more exceptionable extremes in comparatively modern times; and that many of the works themselves are of recent composition. They appear also to have been written chiefly in Bengal and the Eastern districts, many of them being unknown in the West and South of India, and the rites they teach having there failed to set aside the ceremonies of the Vedas, although they are not without an important influence upon the belief and the practices of the people.

The Tantras are too numerous to admit in this place of their specification, but the principal are the Śyámá Rahasya, Rudra Yámala, Mantra Mahodadhi, Sáradá Tilaka, and Káliká Tantra, whilst the Kulachúdámaní, Kulárnava, and similar works, are the chief authorities of one portion of the Śáktas, the sect being divided into two leading branches, the Dakshinácháris and Vámácháris, or followers of the right hand and left hand ritual.

DAKSHINÁS, or BHÁKTAS.

When the worship of any goddess is performed in a public manner, and agreeably to the Vaidik or Pauránic ritual¹, it does not comprehend the impure practices which are attributed to a different division of the adorers of SAKTI, and which are particularly prescribed to the followers of this system. In this form it is termed the Dakshiña, or right hand form of worship². The only observance that can be supposed to form an exception to the general character of this mode is the Bali, an offering of blood, in which rite a number of helpless animals, usually kids, are annually decapitated. In some cases life is offered without shedding blood, when the more barbarous practice is adopted of pummelling with the fists the poor animal to death: at other times blood only is offered without injury to life. These practices, however, are not considered as orthodox, and approach rather to the ritual

“The ritual declared in the Tantras of the Dakshinácháras is pure and conformable to the Vedas.[”]

² वामागमो मदुतो इयं सर्वशूद्रपरः प्रिये ।

न कर्त्तव्यं न कर्त्तव्यं न कर्त्तव्यं कदाचन ।
इदं तु साहसं देवि न कर्त्तव्यं कदाचन ॥

“The Váma ritual, although declared by me, was intended for Súdras only. A Brahman, from receiving spirituous liquor, forfeits his Brahmanical character—let it not be done—let it not ever be done. Goddess, it is brutality, never let it be practiced.”

of the *Vámáchárīs*¹, the more pure Bali consisting of edible grain, with milk and sugar. Animal victims are also offered to Deví, in her terrific forms only, as KÁLÍ or DURGÁ. The worship is almost confined to a few districts; and, perhaps, is carried to no great extent.

Although any of the goddesses may be objects of the Śákta worship, and the term Śakti comprehends them all, yet the homage of the Śaktas is almost restricted to the wife of ŚIVA, and to ŚIVA himself as identified with his consort². The sect is in fact a ra-

"The Bali is of two kinds, Rájasa and Sáttvika; the first consists of meat, and includes the three kinds of flesh; the second of pulse and rice-milk, with the three sweet articles, (ghee, honey, and sugar,) let the Brahman, always pure, offer only the Sáttvika Bali."

The Brahmavaivarta also observes: "The animal sacrifices, it is true, gratify DURGÁ; but they, at the same time, subject the sacrificer to the sin which attaches to the destroyer of animal life. It is declared by the Vedas, that he who slays an animal is hereafter slain by the slain."

यसु सम्मूलयेच्छक्तिं शिवं नैव प्रपूजयेत् ।

"The joint form of ŚIVA and ŚAKTI is to be worshipped by the virtuous. Whoever adores ŚAKTI, and offers not adoration to ŚIVA, that Mántrika is diseased: he is a sinner, and hell will be his portion." For it appears that some of the Śaktas elevate mification from the common Śaiva stock, and is referred to ŚIVA himself as its institutor. In the Tantras, as has been noticed, he appears as its professor, expounding to PÁRVATÍ the mantras, tenets, and observances of the Śákta worship, whether of the right or left hand description.

The worship of Deví, thus naturally resulting from the works on which the Śákta doctrines are founded, is one of considerable antiquity and popularity. Laying aside all uncertain and fabulous testimony, the adoration of Vindhya Vásini, near *Mirzapur*¹, has existed for more than seven centuries, and that of Jválámukhí at Nagarkot very early attracted Mohammedan persecution². These places still retain their reputation, and are the objects of pilgrimage to devout Hindus. On the eighth of the dark fortnight of Chaitra and

शक्तिः शिवस्य बलकारिणी तथा विना तस्य तुणचलमक्रियाद्य-मसमर्थत्वात् । अतः शक्तिरेव शिवस्य कारणं ।

“ŚAKTI gives strength to ŚIVA, without her he could not stir a straw. She is, therefore, the cause of ŚIVA.”

गित्वपदार्थयोर्मध्ये शक्तिरधिकत्वं ।

And again: “of the two objects which are eternal the greater is the ŚAKTI.”

² For a full account of both the work of Mr. WARD may be advantageously consulted—II, 89 to 96, and 125 to 131.

Kártik in particular a numerous assemblage of pilgrims takes place at them.

The adoration of KÁLÍ, or DURGÁ, is however particularly prevalent in Bengal, and is cultivated with practices scarcely known in most other provinces. Her great festival, the Daśahará, is in the West of India marked by no particular honors, whilst its celebration in Bengal occupies ten days of prodigal expenditure. This festival, the Durgá Pújá, is now well known to Europeans, as is the extensive and popular establishment near Calcutta, the temple of KÁLÍ at Kálí Ghát. The rites observed in that place, and at the Durgá Pújá, however, almost place the Bengali Śáktas amongst the Vámacháríś, notwithstanding the rank assigned them in the Dakshináchári Tantrarája, which classes the Gauras with the Keralas and Kashmírtans, as the three principal divisions of the purer worshippers of ŚAKTI.

VÁMÍS, or VÁMÁCHÁRÍS.

The Vámíś mean the left hand worshippers, or those who adopt a ritual contrary to that which is usual, and to what indeed they dare publicly avow¹. They worship Deví, the Śakti of ŚIVA, but all the goddesses, as LAKSHMÍ, SARASVATÍ, the Mátris, the Náyikás, the *Yoginí*s, and even the fiend-like *Dákini*s and *Śákini*s, are admitted to a share of homage. With them, as well as with the preceding sect, ŚIVA is also an object of veneration, especially in the form of BHAIRAVA, with which modification of the deity it is the object of the worshipper to identify himself¹.

The worship of the Vámácháris is derived from a portion of the Tantras: it resolves itself into various subjects, apparently into different sects, of which that of the Kaula, or Kulína, is declared to be pre-eminent². The object of the worship is, by the reverence of Deví or ŚAKTI, who is one with ŚIVA, to obtain supernatural

“The Vedas are pre-eminent over all works, the Vaishnava sect excels the Vedas, the Śaiva sect is preferable to that of VISNU, and the right hand ŚAKTA to that of ŚIVA—the left hand is better than the right hand division, and the Siddhánta is better still—the Kaula is better than the Siddhánta, and there is none better than it.”—Kulárnava. The words Kaula and Kulina are both derivatives from Kula, family; and the latter is especially applied to imply of good or high family: these terms have been adopted to signify, that those who follow this doctrine are not only of one, but of an exalted race.

powers in this life, and to be identified after death with ŚIVA and ŚAKTI.

According to the immediate object of the worshipper is the particular form of worship; but all the forms require the use of some or all of the five *Makáras*¹, Mánsa, Matsya, Madya, Maithuna, and Mudrá, flesh, fish, wine, women, and certain mystical gesticulations. Suitable Mantras are also indispensable, according to the end proposed, consisting of various unmeaning monosyllable combinations of letters of great imaginary efficacy².

मकारपञ्चकश्चैव महापातकनाशनम् ॥

“Wine, flesh, fish, Mudrá, and Maithuna, are the five-fold Makára, which takes away all sin.” [See also Prániatoshaṇí, Calc. edition, p. 277, a.]

² Many specimens might be given, but one will be here sufficient. It is the combination H and S as हस, and is one of the very few to which any meaning is attempted to be given: it is called the Prásáda Mantra, and its virtues and import are thus described in the Kulárnava [chapter 3]:

श्रीप्रासादपरामन्त्रमूर्धान्वायप्रतिष्ठितम् ।
आवयोः परमाकारं यो वैत्ति सः शिवः स्वयम् ॥
शिवादिकिमिपर्यन्तं प्राणिनां प्राणवर्द्धनाम् ।

“He who knows the excellent Prásáda Mantra, that was promulgated by the fifth Veda, (the Tantras) and which is the supreme form of us both, he is himself ŚIVA: this Mantra is present in all beings that breathe, from ŚIVA to a worm, and exists in states of expiration and inspiration.” The letter H is the exhaled, and S the inspirated letter, and as these two acts constitute life, the Mantra they express is the same with life: the

Where the object of the ceremony is to acquire an interview with and control over impure spirits, a dead body is necessary. The adept is also to be alone, at midnight, in a cemetery or place where bodies are burnt or buried, or criminals executed: seated on the corpse he is to perform the usual offerings, and if he does so without fear, the Bhūtas, the Yoginis, and other male or female goblins become his slaves.

In this, and many of the observances practiced, solitude is enjoined; but all the principal ceremonies comprehend the worship of ŚAKTI, and require for that purpose the presence of a female as the living representative and the type of the goddess. This worship is mostly celebrated in a mixed society, the men of which represent Bhairavas or Viras, and the women Bhairavīs and Nāyikās. The ŚAKTI is personated by a naked female, to whom meat and wine are offered, and then distributed amongst the assistants, the recitation of various Mantras and texts, and the performance of the Mudrā, or gesticulations with the fingers, accompanying the different stages of the ceremony, and it is terminated with the most scandalous animated world would not have been formed without it, and exists but as long as it exists, and it is an integral part of the universe, without being distinct from it, as the fragrance of flowers, and sweetness of sugar, oil of Sesamum seed, and ŚAKTI of ŚIVA. He who knows it needs no other knowledge — he who repeats it need practice no other act of adoration. The authority quoted contains a great deal more to the same purpose.

orgies amongst the votaries¹. The ceremony is entitled the Śrī Chakra, or Pūrnābhisheka, the Ring, or Full Initiation.

¹ It might have been sufficient to have given this general statement, or even to have referred to the similar but fuller account of Mr. WARD: his information was however merely oral, and may therefore be regarded as unsatisfactory; and as it seems to be necessary to show that the charge is not altogether unfounded, I shall subjoin the leading rites of the Śakti Śodhana, or Śrī Chakra, as they are prescribed in the Devi Rahasya, a section of the Rudra Ydmala.

ŚAKTI ŚODHANA.

The object of the ceremony should be either:

[The Prānatoshait in which (p. 300, b) the first 3 lines are quoted has instead of the fourth line the following:

विशेषवेदग्रन्थयुताः सर्वत्रैव कुलाङ्गनाः ॥
रूपयौवनसम्पदा शीलसीभाग्यश्लालिनी ।
पूजनीया प्रथलेन ततः सिद्धिभवेत्तुवम् ॥]

“A dancing girl, a female devotee, a harlot, a washerwoman, or barber’s wife, a female of the Brahmanical or Śūdra tribe, a flower girl, or a milk maid.” It is to be performed ad midnight, with a party of eight, nine, or eleven couple, as the Bhairavas and Bhairavas.

Appropriate Mantras are to be used, according to the description of the person selected for the Sakti, who is then to be worshipped, according to prescribed form: she is placed disrobed, but richly ornamented, on the left of a circle (Chakra) described for the purpose, with various Mantras and gesticulations, and is to be rendered pure by the repetition of different formulas.

Being finally sprinkled over with wine, the act being sanctified by the peculiar Mantra,

The Sakti is now purified, but if not previously initiated, she is to be further made an adept by the communication of the radical Mantra whispered thrice in her ear, when the object of the ceremony is complete:

authorities, and by a very general belief of their occurrence. The members of the sect are enjoined secrecy, which, indeed, it might be supposed they would observe on their own account, and, consequently, will not acknowledge their participation in such scenes. They will not, indeed, confess that they are of the Śākta sect, although their reserve in this respect is said, latterly, to be much relaxed. It is contrary, however, to all knowledge of the human character, to admit the possibility of these transactions in their fullest extent; and, although the worship of the ŚAKTI, according to the above outline, may be sometimes performed, yet there can be little doubt of its being practiced but seldom, and then in solitude and secrecy. In truth, few of the ceremonies, there is reason to believe, are ever observed; and, although the Chakra is said to be not uncommon, and by some of the zealous Śāktas it is scarcely concealed, it is usually nothing more than a convivial party, consisting of the members of a single family, or at which men only are assembled, and the company are glad to eat flesh and drink spirits¹, under the pretence of a religious ob-

“Many false pretenders to knowledge, and who have not been duly initiated, pretend to practice the Kaula rites; but if perfection be obtained by drinking wine, independently of my commands, then every drunkard is a saint: if virtue consist in eating flesh, then every carnivorous animal in the world is virtuous: if eternal happiness be derived from sexual intercourse, then all beings will be entitled to it: a follower of the Kula doctrine is blameless in my sight, if he reproves those of other

The followers are considered as very numerous, especially amongst the Brahmanical tribe: all classes are however admissible, and are equal and alike at the ceremonies of the sect. In the world¹ they resume their characteristic distinctions, and wear the sectarial marks, and usually adopt the outward worship of any other division, whether orthodoxal or heretical. When they assume particular insignia, they are a semi-circular line or lines on the forehead, of red saunders or vermillion, or a red streak up the middle of the forehead, with a circular spot of red at the root of the nose. They use a rosary of Rudraksha creeds who quit their established observances—those of other sects who use the articles of the Kaula worship, shall be condemned to repeated generations as numerous as the hairs of the body.”—In fact, the texts of Manu are taken as authorities for the penance to be performed for the crimes of touching, smelling, looking at, or tasting the forbidden articles, except upon religious occasions, and when they are consecrated by the appropriate texts.

It is only to be added, that if the promulgators of these doctrines were sincere, which is far from impossible, they must have been filled with a strange phrenzy, and have been strangely ignorant of human nature.

seeds, or of coral beads, but of no greater length than may be concealed in the hand, or they keep it in a small purse, or a bag of red cloth. In worshipping they wear a piece of red silk round the loins, and decorate themselves with garlands of crimson flowers.

KÁNCHULIYAS.

This is a sect of which the existence may be questioned, notwithstanding the assertion that it is not uncommon in the South of India. The worship is that of ŚAKTI, and the practices are similar to those of the Kaulas, or Vámácháris. It is said to be distinguished by one peculiar rite, the object of which is to confound all the ties of female alliance, and to enforce not only a community of women amongst the votaries, but disregard even to natural restraints. On occasions of worship the female votaries are said to deposit their upper vests* in a box in charge of the Guru. At the close of the usual rites the male worshippers take each a vest from the box, and the female to whom the garment appertains, be she ever so nearly of kin to him, is the partner for the time of his licentious pleasures¹.

* [Called Kanchuli in Tamil; hence the name of the sect.]

पुरुषाणां सर्वज्ञातिकाणामिक्षवातिवद्विवेको धर्मः स्त्रीणां सर्वज्ञातिकाणामिक्षज्ञातिवद्विवेको धर्मः । तासांश्च तेषांश्च संयोगे वियोगे च दोषाभावः ।

KARÁRÍ.

The Karári is the worshipper of Deví, in her terrific forms, and is the representative of the Aghorá Gháñta and *Kápálíka*¹, who as lately only as seven or eight centuries ago, there is reason to suppose, sacrificed human victims to Kálí, Chámuñdá, Chrinna-mastaká, and other hideous personifications of the Śakti of Śiva. The attempt to offer human beings in the present day, is not only contrary to every known ritual, but it would be attended with too much peril to be practiced, and consequently it cannot be believed that this sect is in existence: the only votaries, if any there be, consisting of the miscreants who, more for

The same sort of story is told, but apparently with great injustice, of the Mohammedan Vyavaháris or Bohras, and of a less known Mohammedan sect, the Chiraghkesh: something of the same kind was imputed to the early Christians by their adversaries.

pay than devotion, inflict upon themselves bodily tortures, and pierce their flesh with hooks or spits, run sharp pointed instruments through their tongues and cheeks, recline upon beds of spikes, or gash themselves with knives, all which practices are occasionally met with throughout India, and have become familiar to Europeans from the excess to which they are carried in Bengal at the Charak Pújá, a festival which, as a public religious observance, is unknown anywhere else, and which is not directed nor countenanced by any of the authorities of the Hindus, not even by the Tantras.

MISCELLANEOUS SECTS.

The sects that have been described are those of the regular system, and particularly of what may be called Brahmanical Hinduism, emanating, more or less directly, from the doctrines of the original creed. Besides these there are a number which it is not so easy to class, although they are mostly referable to a common source, and partake, in many respects, of the same notions, especially of those of a Vaishnava and Vedánta tendency. They exist in various degrees of popularity, and date from various periods, and in most instances owe their institution to enthusiastic or contemplative individuals, whose biography is yet preserved consistently enough by tradition.

This is not the case, however, with the first two on the list—the Saurapátas and Gánapátas: these are usually, indeed, ranked with the preceding divisions, and make with the Vaishnavas, Śaivas, and Śáktas the five orthodox divisions of the Hindus: they are of limited extent and total insignificance.

SAURAPÁTAS, or SAURAS.

The Saurapátas are those who worship SÚRYAPATI, the Sun-god, only; there are a few of them, but very few, and they scarcely differ from the rest of the Hindus in their general observances. The Tilaka, or frontal mark, is made in a particular manner, with red sandal, and the necklace should be of crystal: these are their chief peculiarities: besides which they eat one meal without salt on every Sunday, and each Sankránti, or the sun's entrance into a sign of the Zodiac: they cannot eat either until they have beheld the sun, so that it is fortunate that they inhabit his native regions.

GÁÑAPATYAS.

These are worshippers of GÁÑEŚA, or GÁÑAPATI, and can scarcely be considered as a distinct sect: all the Hindus, in fact, worship this deity as the obviator of difficulties and impediments, and never commence any work, or set off on a journey, without invoking his protection. Some, however, pay him more particular devotion than the rest, and these are the only persons to whom the classification may be considered applicable. GÁÑEŚA however, it is believed, is never exclusively venerated, and the worship, when it is paid, is addressed to some of his forms, particularly those of Vaktratuńda and Dhúndhiráj.

NÁNAK SHÁHÍS.

A sect of much greater importance is that which originated with NÁNAK SHÁH, and which, from bearing at first only a religious character, came, in time, to be a political and national distinction, through the influence of Mohammedan persecution and individual ambition. The enterprising policy of GOVIND SINH and the bigotry of AURANGZEB converted the peaceful tenets of NÁNAK into a military code, and his speculative disciples into the warlike nation of the Sikhs. It is not, however, in their political capacity that we are now to consider them, but as the professors of a peculiar form of faith, which branches into various sub-divisions, and is by no means restricted to the Punjab. At the same time it is unnecessary to detail the tenets and practices of the Sikhs, as that has been already performed in a full and satisfactory manner.

The Sikhs, or Nának Sháhís, are classed under seven distinctions, all recognising Nának as their primitive instructor, and all professing to follow his doctrines, but separated from each other by variations of practice, or by a distinct and peculiar teacher. Of these the first is the sect of the Udásís.

UDÁSÍS.

These may be regarded as the genuine disciples of Nának, professing, as the name denotes, indifference to worldly vicissitudes. They are purely religious characters devoting themselves to prayer and meditation, and usually collected in Sangats, colleges or convents; they also travel about to places of pilgrimage, generally in parties of some strength. Individuals of them are to be met with in most of the chief cities of Hindustan, living under the patronage of some man of rank or property; but in all situations they profess poverty, although they never solicit alms; and although ascetics, they place no merit in wearing mean garments or dispensing altogether with clothes. On the contrary, they are, in general, well dressed, and, allowing the whiskers and beard to grow, are not unfrequently of a venerable and imposing appearance. Though usually practicing celibacy, it does not appear to be a necessary condition amongst the Sikhs to be found in the Gangetic provinces: they are usually the ministrant priests; but their office consists chiefly in reading and expounding the writings of NÁNAK and GOVIND SINH, as collected in the Ádi Granth and Das Pádsháh ká granth. The perusal is enlivened by the chanting, occasionally, of Hindi Padas and Rekhtas, the compositions of KABÍR, MÍRÁ BÁÍ, SÚR DÁŚ, and others. With that fondness for sensible objects of reverence which characterises the natives of India, the Book is also worshipped, and Rupees, flowers, and fruits are presented by the votaries, which become, of course, the property of the officiating Udásí. In return, the Udásí not uncommonly adopts the presentation of the Prásáda, and at the close of the ceremony sweetmeats are distributed amongst the congregation. In some of the establishments at Benares the service is held in the evening after sunset, and the singing and feasting continue through a great part of the night. Many of the Udásis are well read in Sanskrit, and are able expounders of the Vedánta philosophy, on which the tenets of NÁNAK are mainly founded.

The Udásí sect was established by DHARMACHAND, the grandson of NÁNAK, through whom the line of the Sage was continued, and his descendants, known by the name of Nának Putras, are still found in the Panjáb, where they are treated by the Šikhs with especial veneration.

The doctrine taught by NÁNAK appears to have differed but little from that of KABÍR, and to have deviated but inconsiderably from the Hindu faith in general. The whole body of poetical and mythological fiction was retained, whilst the liberation of the spirit from the delusive deceits of Máyá, and its purification by acts of benevolence and self-denial, so as to make it identical even in life with its divine source, were the great objects of the devotee. Associated with these notions was great chariness of animal life, whilst with NÁNAK, as well as with KABÍR, universal tolerance was a dogma of vital importance, and both laboured to persuade Hindus and Mohammedans that the only essential parts of their respective creeds were common to both, and that they should discard the varieties of practical detail, or the corruptions of their teachers.

for the worship of one only Supreme, whether he was termed Allah or Hari. How far these doctrines are still professed by the Nának Sháhís, may be inferred from the translations in the eleventh volume of the Researches, to which the following may be added as part of the service solemnized at the Síkh Sangat, at Benares.

HYMN.

Thou art the Lord—to thee be praise.
 All life is with thee.
 Thou art my parents, I am thy child—
 All happiness is derived from thy clemency.
 No one knows thy end.
 Highest Lord amongst the highest—
 Of all that exists Thou art the regulator.
 And all that is from thee obeys thy will.
 Thy movements—thy pleasure—thou only knowest.
Nándk, thy slave, is a free-will offering unto thee.

The Priest then says—
 Meditate on the Sáheb of the Book, and exclaim Wah Guru.
 The People accordingly repeat—
Wah Guru—Wah Guru ki fateh.
 The Priest—
 Meditating on Rámachandra, exclaim Wah Guru.
 The People—
Wah Guru—Wah Guru ki fateh.

HYMN.

Love, and fix thy whole heart upon Him—
 The world is bound to thee by prosperity—
 No one is another's.
 Whilst prosperity endures many will come,
 And sit with thee and surround thee;

But in adversity they will fly,
 And not one will be near thee.
 The woman of the house who loves thee,
 And is ever in thy bosom,
 When the spirit quits the body,
 Will fly with alarm from the dead.
 Such is the way of the world
 With all on which we place affection;
 Do thou, Nának, at thy last hour,
 Rely alone upon Hari.

Priest as before—

Meditating on the Sáheb of the Book, &c.

People as before—

Wah Guru, &c.

HYMN.

My holy teacher is he who teaches clemency—
 The heart is awake withiu: who seeks may find.
 Wonderful is that rosary, every bead of which is the breath.
 Lying apart in its arbour, it knows what cometh to pass.
 The Sage is he who is merciful; the merciless is a butcher.
 Thou wieldest the knife and regardlessly exclaimest:
 What is a goat, what is a cow, what are animals?
 But the Sáheb declares that the blood of all is the same.
 Saints, Prophets, and Seers have all passed in death.
Nának, destroy not life for the preservation of the body.
 That desire of life which is in the heart do thou, brother, repress.
Nának, calling aloud, says: take refuge with Hari.

GANJ BAKHSHÍS.

Of this division of the Šikhs no particulars, except the name, have been ascertained. This is said to have been derived from that of the founder. They are not numerous nor of any note.

RÁMRÁYÍS.

These derive their appellation from that of RÁMA RÁYA, the son or grandson of HARI RÁYA, and their distinction from the other Šikhs is more of a political than religious complexion. RÁMA RÁYA disputed the succession to the Pontificate with HARI KRÍSHNA, the son of HARI RÁYA, and was unsuccessful. His followers, however, maintain the superiority of his pretensions, and record many miracles wrought by him in proof of his sanctity. He flourished about A. D. 1660. The Rámráyís are not common in Hindustan.

SUTHRÁ SHÁHÍS.

These are more often met with than either of the two preceding, and the priests are recognisable by distinguishing marks. They make a perpendicular black streak down the forehead, and carry two small black sticks about half a yard in length, which they clash together when they solicit alms. They lead a vagabond life, begging and singing songs in the Panjábi and other dialects, mostly of a moral or mystic tendency. They are held in great disrepute, however, and are not unfrequently gamblers, drunkards, and thieves. They look up to TEGH BAHÁDUR, the father of GURU GOVIND, as their founder.

• GOVIND SINHIS.

These form the most important division of the Sikh community, being in fact the political association to which the name is applied, or to the Sikh nation generally¹. Although professing to derive their national faith from Nának, and holding his memory in veneration, the faith they follow is widely different from the quietism of that reformer, and is wholly of a worldly and warlike spirit. GURU GOVIND devoted his followers to steel, and hence the worship of the sword, as well as its employment against both Mohammedans and Hindus. He also ordered his adherents to allow their hair and beards to grow, and to wear blue garments: he permitted them to eat all kinds of flesh, except that of kine, and he threw open his faith and cause to all castes, to whomsoever chose to abandon the institutes of Hinduism, or belief in the mission of Mohammed, for a fraternity of arms and life of predatory daring. It was then only that the Sikhs became a people, and were separated from their Indian countrymen in political constitution, as well as religious tenets. At the same time the Sikhs are still, to a certain extent, Hindus: they worship the deities of the Hindus, and celebrate all their festivals: they derive their legends and literature from the same sources, and pay great veneration to the Brahmans. The impress of their origin is still, therefore, strongly retained, notwithstanding their rejection of caste, and their substituting the *Daś Pádsháh ká granth*¹, the compilation of Guru Govind, for the Vedas, and Puráñas.

NIRMALAS.

These differ but little from the Udásis, and are perhaps still closer adherents to the doctrines of the

The other standard authority of the Śikhs, the Ādi Granth, is a compilation chiefly of the works of Nának, and his immediate successors, made by Arjunmal, a Śikh teacher, in the end of the 16th century. As it is usually met with, however, it comprehends the writings of many other individuals, many of whom are Vaishnavas. At a Śikh Sangat, or Chapel, in Benares, the Book, a large folio, there denominated the Śambhu Granth, was said to contain the contributions of the following writers:—

founder, as the name imports: they profess to be free from all worldly soil or stain and, consequently, lead a wholly religious life. They observe celibacy, and disregard their personal appearance, often going nearly naked. They are not, like the Uddasis, assembled in colleges, nor do they hold any particular form of divine service, but confine their devotion to speculative meditation on the perusal of the writings of NÁNAK, KÁBÍR, and other unitarian teachers. They are always solitary, supported by their disciples or opulent individuals, and are often known as able expounders of the Vedánta philosophy, in which Brahmans do not disdain to become their scholars. They are not very numerous; but a few are almost always to be found at the principal seats of Hindu wealth and learning, and particularly at *Benares*¹.

The naked mendicants of the Sikhs are said to differ from those of the Vaishnava and Šaiva sects by abstaining from the use of arms, and following a retired and religious life. Except in going without clothes, they are not distinguishable from the Nirmalas.

JAINS.

A satisfactory account of the religion of the Jains would require a distinct dissertation, and cannot be comprised within the limits necessarily assigned to this general sketch of the Hindu sects. The subject is of considerable interest, as affecting a very large proportion of the population of India, and involving many important considerations connected with the history of the Hindu faith: an extended inquiry must, however, be left to some further opportunity; and in the meantime our attention will be confined to a few observations on the peculiar tenets and practices of the Jain religion, its past history, and actual condition.

Previously, however, to entering upon these subjects, it may be advisable to advert briefly to what has been already done towards their elucidation, and to the materials which exist in the original languages for a complete view. The latter are of the most extensive description, whilst the labours of European writers are by no means wanting to an accurate estimate of the leading doctrines of the Jain faith, or to an appreciation of the state in which it exists in various parts of Hindustan.

The first authentic notices of the Jains occur in the ninth volume of the Asiatic Researches, from the pens of the late Colonel MACKENZIE, Dr. BUCHANAN, and Mr. COLEBROOKE. The two first described the Jains from personal acquaintance, and from their accounts it appeared, that they existed, in considerable numbers and respectability, in Southern India, particularly in Mysore, and on the Canara Coast; that they laid claim to high antiquity, and enumerated a long series of religious teachers, and that they differed in many of their tenets and practices from the orthodox Hindus, by whom they were regarded with aversion and contempt. A further illustration of their doctrines, and a particular account of their deified teachers was derived by Mr. COLEBROOKE from some of their standard authorities, then first made known to Europeans.

Little more was published on the subject of the Jains until very lately, with exception of numerous but brief and scattered notices of the sect in the Peninsula, in BUCHANAN's Travels in Mysore. Some account of them also occurs in Colonel WILKS' Historical Sketch of the South of India, and in the work of the Abbé DUBOIS. Mr. WARD has an article dedicated to the Jains, in his account of the Hindus; and Mr. ERSKINE has briefly adverted to some of their peculiarities in his Observations on the Cave of Elephanta, and the remains of the Bauddhas in India, in the Proceedings of the Bombay Literary Society. It is, however, to the Transaction of the Royal Asiatic Society that we are indebted for the latest and most detailed accounts, and the papers of Mr. COLEBROOKE, Major DELAMAIN, Dr. HAMILTON, Colonel FRANKLIN and Major Tod¹, furnish many interesting particulars relative to the doctrines and past or present condition of the Jains. Some valuable illustration of the latter subject is to be found in the Calcutta Quarterly Magazine²: some historical notices obtained from the inscriptions at Abū occur in the last volume of our Researches, whilst a novel and rather comprehensive view of Jain literature is contained in the Catalogue of Manuscripts collected by the late Colonel MACKENZIE³.

From this latter authority we learn that the literature peculiar to Jainas comprises a number of works peculiar to the sect, the composition of their own writers, and on a variety of subjects⁴. They have a series of works called Puráñas, as the Adi and Uttara Puráñas, Chámuńda Ráya Puráña, and *Chaturvinśati Puráña*¹; but these are not to be confounded with the Puráñas of the Hindus; as, although they occasionally insert legends borrowed from the latter, their especial object is the legendary history of the Tirthankaras, or deified teachers, peculiar to the sect. The chief Puráñas are attributed to JINA SENA ÁCHÁRYA, whom some accounts make contemporary with VIKRAMÁDITYA; but the greater number, and most consistent of the traditions of the South, describe him as the spiritual preceptor of AMOGHAVARSHA, king of Kánchi, at the end of the ninth century of the Christian era. Analogous to the Jain Puráñas are works denominated Charitras, their subject being, in general, the marvellous history of some Tirthankara, or some holy personage, after whom they are denominated, as the Jinadatta Ráya Charitra, Píjyapáda Charitra, and others. They have a number of works explanatory of their philosophical notions and religious tenets of the sect, as well as rituals of practice, and a grammatical system founded on the rules of SÁKATÁYANA is illustrated by glosses and commentaries. The Jains have also their own writers on astronomy and astrology, on medicine, on the mathematical sciences, and the form and disposition of the universe.

Arithmetic,	2
Miscellaneous,	4

This general view of Jain literature is afforded by the MACKENZIE Collection, but the list there given is very far from including the whole of Jain literature, or even a considerable proportion. The works there alluded to are, in fact, confined to Southern India, and are written in Sanskrit, or the dialects of the Peninsula; but every province of Hindustan can produce Jain compositions, either in Sanskrit or its vernacular idiom, whilst many of the books, and especially those which may be regarded as their scriptural authorities, are written in the Prákrit or Mágadhi, a dialect which, with the Jains as well as the Bauddhas, is considered to be the appropriate vehicle of their sacred literature.

The course of time, and the multiplication of writings, have probably rendered it almost impossible to reduce what may be considered as the sacred literature of the Jains to a regular system. They are said to have a number of works entitled Siddhántas and *Agamas*¹, which are to them what the Vedas are to the Brahmanical Hindus; and this appears to be the case, although the enumeration which is sometimes made of them is of a loose and popular character, and scarcely reconcileable with that to be derived from written authority².

² The following Works are either in my possession or in the library of the Sanskrit College of Calcutta. Compositions descriptive of the tenets or practices of the Jain religion: Bhagavatyangam. This is one of the eleven primary works, and is entitled also in Prákrit Viváha Paññatti, in Sanskrit Viváha, or Vivádhá Prajnapti, Instruction in the various sources of worldly pain, or in the paths of virtue. It consists of lessons given to GAUTAMA by MAHÁVIRA, and is in Prákrit. It contains 36,000 stanzas. Bhagavatyanga Vítti, a Sanskrit Commentary on the preceding (defective.) Thánanga Sútra,—also one of the eleven Angas. Kalpa Sútra, the precepts of the Jain faith—these are originally 1250; but they are interspersed with legends of the Tirthankaras, and especially of MAHÁVIRA, at the pleasure of the writer, and the several copies of the work therefore differ. Prákrit.

liarity of the system which he taught, and may be regarded as a safe guide. In his vocabulary* he specifies what appear to be the Jaina scriptures, at least in the estimation of the Śvetámbara sect, to which he belonged, and in a valuable Commentary on his own work he has further particularised the works named in his text. From this it appears that the principal authorities of a sacred character were termed Angas, and were eleven in number or, with a supplementary division, twelve. They are thus enumerated and described: Achárángam, a book teaching sacred observances after the practice of Váśishtha and other saints. Sútrakritángam, a work on acts imposed by positive precepts. Sthánángam, on the organs in which life abides, or the ten acts essential to purity. Samaváyángam, on the hundred Pudárthas or categories. Bhagavatyangam, on the ritual, or rules for worship. Jnátádharmakathá, an account of the acquisition of knowledge by holy personages. Upásakadaśá, rules for the conduct of Śrávakas, or secular Jains, appa-

With these are connected inferior Angas or Upánargas, the names of which are not specified—whilst the Drishtiváda, the twelfth Anga, which seems to be a supplementary authority, is divided into five portions entitled: Parikarma, on moral acts; Sútra, precepts for conduct and life; Púrvánuyoga, on the doctrines and practice of the Tīrthankaras before attaining perfection; Púrvavagata, on the same after perfection! Chálíká, on doctrines and practice not comprised in the two preceding.

These different works profess to be derived from the oral instructions of MAHÁVÍRA himself to his disciples, especially to GAUTAMA; but besides these a class of works is enumerated by HEMACHANDRA, entitled Púrvas, because they were drawn up by the Guṇadharas before the *Angas*¹. There are fourteen of them treating of the chief tenets of the sect, apparently sometimes controversially, as the Astipraváda, the doctrine of existence and non-existence; Jnánapraváda, the doctrine of holy knowledge; Satyapra- váda, discussion of truth; Ātmapraváda, investigation of spirit; Práṇaváya, nature of corporeal life; Kriyá-viśála, consequences of acts, and others¹. They are held to be the works of MAHÁVÍRA's Gaṇas, or of that Tirthankara and his predecessors, or to have emanated from them originally, although committed to writing by other hands. Some of them still exist, it appears², although in general their places have been assumed by a list of more recent compositions.

From this brief statement it will be evident that there is no want of original authorities with regard to the belief, the practices, or the legends of the Jaina sect. There is indeed more than a sufficiency, and the vast extent of the materials is rather prejudicial to the enquiry, it being impossible to consult any extensive proportion of what has been written, and it being equally impossible without so doing to know that the best guides have been selected. For such accounts as are here given, the Vocabulary of HEMACHANDRA, with his own Commentary, the Mahávíra Charitra of the same author, the Kalpa Sútra, the Avaśyakavárihad Vritta, the Bhagavatyanga Vritta, Nava Tattwabodha, and Jiva Vichára have chiefly been consulted.

The leading tenets of the Jains, and those which

² Thus the Thánágisútra and Upásakadaśa, of HAMILTON, are no doubt the Sthánáṅga and Upásakadaśa of Hemachandra's text; the Bhagavatyanga is in the Sanskrit College Library.

chiefly distinguish them from the rest of the Hindus, are well known—they are, first, the denial of the divine origin and infallible authority of the Vedas; secondly, the reverence of certain holy mortals who acquired, by practices of self-denial and mortification, a station superior to that of the gods; and thirdly, extreme and even ludicrous tenderness of animal life.

The disregard of the authority of the Vedas is common to the Jains and the Bauddhas, and involves a neglect of the rites which they prescribe: in fact, it is in a great degree from those rites that an inference unfavourable to the sanctity of the Vedas is drawn; and not to speak of the sacrifices of animals which the Vedas occasionally enjoin, the Homa, or burnt offering, which forms a part of every ceremonial in those works, is an abomination, as insects crawling amongst the fuel, bred by the fermented butter, or falling into the flame, cannot fail to be destroyed by every oblation. As far however as the doctrines they teach are conformable to Jain tenets, the Vedas are admitted and quoted as authority.

The veneration and worship of mortals is also common to the Jains and Bauddhas, but the former have expanded and methodised the notions of the latter. The Bauddhas, although they admit an endless number of earthly Buddhas to have existed, and specify more than a century of names¹, confine their reverence to a comparatively small number—to seven. The Jainas extend this number to twenty-four for a given period, and enumerate by name the twenty-four of their past age, or Avasarpini, the twenty-four of the present, and the twenty-four of the age to come. The statues of these, either all or in part, are assembled in their temples, sometimes of colossal dimensions, and usually of black or white marble. The objects held in highest esteem in Hindustan are Párvanáth and Mahávíra, the twenty-third and twenty-fourth Jinas of the present era, who seem to have superseded all their predecessors.

The generic names of a Jaina saint express the ideas entertained of his character by his votaries. He is Jagatprabhu, lord of the world; Kshínakarmá, free from bodily or ceremonial acts; Sarvajna, omniscient; Adhívara, supreme lord; Devádhídeva, god of gods; and similar epithets of obvious purport; whilst others are of a more specific character, as Tirthakara, or Tirthankara, Kevali, Arhat, and Jina. The first implies one who has crossed over (Tiryate anena), that is the world, compared to the ocean; Kevali is the possessor of Kevala, or spiritual nature, free from its investing sources of error; Arhat is one entitled to the homage of gods and men, and Jina is the victor over all human passions and infirmities¹.

Besides these epithets, founded on attributes of a generic character, there are other characteristics common to all the Jinas of a more specific nature. These are termed Atisayas, or super-human attributes, and are altogether thirty-six; four of them, or rather four classes, regard the person of a Jina, such as the beauty of his form, the fragrance of his body, the white colour of his blood, the curling of his hair, its non-increase, and that of the beard and nails, his exemption from all natural impurities, from hunger and thirst, from infirmity and decay: these properties are considered to be born with him. He can collect around him millions of beings, gods, men, and animals, in a comparatively small space, his voice is audible to a great distance, and his language, which is Arddha Māgadhi, is intelligible to animals, men and gods, the back of his head is surrounded with a halo of light brighter than the disk of the sun, and for an immense interval around him, wherever he moves, there is neither sickness nor enmity, storm nor dearth, neither plague portents, nor war. Eleven Atisayas of this kind are ascribed to him. The remaining nineteen are of celestial origin, as the raining of flowers and perfumes, the sound of heavenly drums, and the menial offices rendered by Indra and the gods*.

Notwithstanding the sameness of the general character and identity of generic attributes, the twenty-four Jinas are distinguished from each other in colour, stature, and longevity. Two of them are red, two white, two blue, two black, the rest are of a golden hue, or a yellowish brown. The other two peculiarities are regulated with very systematic precision, and observe a series of decrement from Rishabha, the first Jina, who was five hundred poles in stature, and lived 8,400,000 great years, to Mahāvīra, the 24th, who had degenerated to the size of man, and was not more than forty years on earth. These peculiarities have been detailed by MR. COLEBROOKE, in the ninth volume of the Researches, and he draws a probable inference from the return to reason in the stature and years of the two last Jinas, that they alone are to be considered as historical personages. The rest are the creatures of fiction. The notion of decreasing longevity, like that of the existence of human beings, superior to the gods, is common to the *Buddhas*¹.

* [Hemachandra I. I. 62-88.]

There is also great similarity in the general tenor

Vipasyī ,	80,000 Years.
Sikhi ,	70,000 ditto.
Viśvabhū ,	60,000 ditto.
Krakuchchhanda ,	40,000 ditto.
Kanaka ,	30,000 ditto.
Kāśyapa ,	20,000 ditto.
Śākyā ,	100 ditto.

A. R. Vol. XVI, p. 453. The last Jina but one, or Pārśvanāth, lived, like Śākyā, 100 years. [See also A. Weber, Ueber das Śatrunjaya Māhātmyam. Leipzig: 1858, p. 3, and C. F. Koeppen, die Religion des Buddha, I, p. 314 ff.]

of the legends related of each of the Jinas. They are all born a number of times, and in a variety of characters, before they arrive at the state of a Tirthankara: after which, as their attainment of divine knowledge is the work of self-denial and ascetic meditation, we need not expect much varied incident in their adventures. A sketch of the life of MAHÁVÍRA, from the Mahávira Charitra, will convey some notion of their ordinary history, whilst further illustration may be derived from an abstract of the Párvanátha Charitra, or life of PÁRVANÁTHA, in the Royal Asiatic Society's Transactions *.

LIFE OF MAHÁVÍRA.

The twenty-fourth Tirthankara MAHÁVÍRA's first birth, which occurred at a period indefinitely remote, was as NAYASÁRA, head man of a village, in the country of Vijaya, subject to ŚATRUMARDANA. His piety and humanity elevated him next to the heaven called Saudharma, where he enjoyed happiness for some oceans of years. He was next born as MARÍCHI, the grandson of the first Tirthankara RÍSHABHA, then transferred to the Brahmaloka, whence he returned to earth as a worldly-minded and sensual Brahman, the consequence of which was his repeated births in the same caste, each birth being separated by an interval passed in one of the Jain heavens, and each period of life extending to many lakhs of years. He then became VIŚVABHÚTA, prince of Rájagríha, and next a Vásu- deva, named TRIPRÍSHTHA, from having three back bones: his uncle and foe in a former life, Visabhánandí, was born as his Protagonist, or Prativásudeva, named AŚVAGRÍVA or HAYAGRÍVA, and was, in the course of events, destroyed by the Vásudeva, a palpable adaptation of the Pauráńic legend of VISHNU and HAYAGRÍVA. TRIPRÍSHTHA having put his Chamberlain cruelly to death was condemned to hell, and again born as a lion: he migrated through various forms, until he became the Chakravartti PRIYAMITRA, in the division of the world Mahávideha. After a victorious reign of eighty-four lakhs of years he became an ascetic for a further period of a hundred lakhs, and was then translated to one of the higher heavens. Thence he returned to earth in the Bharata division as NANDANA, the son of JITAŚATRU, who adopted a life of devotion and diligently adored the Jinas. After an existence of twenty-five lakhs of years he was raised to the dignity of king of the gods in the Pushpottara heaven, in which capacity he preserved his ancient faith, offering flowers to, and bathing daily the one hundred and eight images of the Arhats. Such exalted piety was now to meet with its reward, and the pains of existence were to be terminated in the person of the Tírthankara MAHÁVÍRA, or VARDDHAMÁNA.

On the return of the spirit of NANDANA to earth it first animated the womb of the wife of a Brahman, but MAHENDRA disapproving of the receptacle as of low caste transferred it to the womb of TRIŚALÁ, wife of SIDDHÁRTHA, of the family of Ikshváku, and prince of Pavana, in Bharatakshetra. MAHÁVÍRA was born on the thirteenth of the light fortnight of Chaitra: the fifty-six nymphs of the universe assisted at his birth, and his consecration was performed by ŚAKRA, and the other sixty-three Indras. The name given by his father was VARDDHAMÁNA, as causing increase of riches and prosperity, but ŚAKRA gave him also the appellation of MAHÁVÍRA as significant of his power and supremacy over men and gods.

When arrived at maturity, MAHÁVÍRA was prevailed upon by his parents to marry YAŚODÁ, daughter of the prince SAMARAVÍRA. By her he had a daughter, PRIYADARŚANÁ, who was married to JAMÁLÍ, a prince, one of the Saint's pupils, and founder of a schism. SIDDHÁRTHA and his wife died when their son was twenty-eight years old, on which MAHÁVÍRA adopted an ascetic life, the government devolving on his elder brother NANDIVARDDHANA. After two years of abstinence and self-denial at home he commenced an erratic life, and the attainment of the degree of a Jina.

During the first six years of his peregrination, MAHÁVÍRA observed frequent fasts of several months' duration, during each of which he kept his eyes fixed upon the tip of his nose, and maintained perpetual silence. He was invisibly attended by a Yaksha, named SIDDHÁRTHA, who, at the command of INDRA, watched over his personal security, and where speech was necessary acted as spokesman. At Náláñdá, a village near Rájagríha, MAHÁVÍRA acquired a follower named GOŚÁLA, so called from his birth in a cow-house, a man of low caste and vulgar propensities, and who acts as a sort of buffoon¹. He is involved in repeated difficulties and not unfrequently receives a beating, but when free from fault, the Yakshas, who attend on SIDDHÁRTHA, come to his aid, and destroy with fire the houses and property of his assailants. Amongst other enemies he provokes the followers of VARDDHANA SÚRI, the disciple of CHANDRA-ÁCHÁRYA, a teacher of the Jain faith, according to the doctrines of PÁRSVANÁTH. In the course of the dispute it appears that the followers of PÁRSVANÁTH wore clothes, whilst MAHÁVÍRA was indifferent to vesture, and the latter consequently belonged to the division of the Jains called Digambaras, or those who go naked, whilst PÁRSVANÁTH's disciples were Śvetámbaras, dressed in garments².

¹ Some curious and unintelligible things are related of this individual, which suggest a suspicion that the author had in view some of the oriental legends relating to Mani or Manes. The birth of GOŚÁLA in a cow-house may or may not refer to Christianity; but it is also observed that his father and mother carried about a Chitra pattiķá, a painted cloth or picture, which GOŚÁLA stole from them, and that when he adopted the service of MAHÁVÍRA, he abandoned the heresy of the picture, चित्रफलकपाषण्डविहाय.

² They reply to GOŚÁLA's enquiry: निर्यन्ता: पार्श्वशिष्याः पर्यन्ताः वर्यन्ताः निर्यन्ता वस्त्रादिप्रवधारिणः । केवलं अविकाहतोरियं पाषण्डकल्पना ॥ वस्त्रादिसंगरहितो निरपेष्ठो वपुष्यति । धर्माधार्यो हि यद्वग्मे निर्यन्तास्तादृशाः खलु ॥ “How can you be free from restraint, encumbered with clothes and the like? these heretical practices are adopted merely for a livelihood: wholly unfettered by clothes and such things, and disregarding the body,

During the six years expended in this manner MAHÁVÍRA visits a number of places, most of which appear to be in Behár and the adjacent provinces, as Rájagríha, Śrávasti near Oude, Vaiśálí, which is identified with the capital of Behár, and others.

Proceeding on his peregrinations MAHÁVÍRA voluntarily exposed himself to be maltreated by the Mlechchha tribes of Vajrabhúmi, Śuddhibhúmi, and Lát, or Lár, the countries apparently of the Gońds, who abused and beat him, and shot at him with arrows, and baited him with dogs, to all which he offered no resistance, and indeed rejoiced in his sufferings; for, however necessary to personal purification, it is not the duty of a Jain ascetic to inflict tortures upon himself—his course of penance is one of self-denial, fasting and silence, and pain, however meritorious its endurance, must be inflicted by others, not himself. At the end of the ninth year MAHÁVÍRA relinquished his silence in answer to a question put by Gośála, but continued engaged in the practice of mortification and in an erratic life. His squire having learned from him the possession of the Tejalesya, or power of ejecting flame, and having learned from certain of the disciples of PÁRSVANÁTH, what is technically termed the followers of such a teacher as mine is are the only persons exempt from restraint." Further confirmation of MAHÁVÍRA and his followers being Digambaras occurs in various places, especially in a passage where Gośála gets beaten, and almost killed by the women of a village in Magadha, because he is a naked Śramaṇa, or mendicant.

the Mahánimitta of the eight Angas, intending probably their scriptural doctrines, set up for himself as a Jina, and quitted his master.

INDRA having declared that MAHÁVÍRA's meditations could not be disturbed by men or gods, one of the inferior spirits of heaven, indignant at the assertion, assailed the Sage with a variety of horrors and temptations, but in vain. MAHÁVÍRA's pious abstraction was unbroken. He then wandered about and visited Kauśámbí, the capital of Śatánika, where he was received with great veneration, and where his period of self-denial ended in perfect exemption from human infirmities. The whole of the time expended by him in these preparatory exercises was twelve years and six months, and of this he had fasted nearly eleven years. His various fasts are particularised with great minuteness, as one of six months, nine of four months each, twelve of one month, and seventy-two of half a month each, making altogether ten years and three hundred and forty-nine days.

The bonds of action were snapped like an old rope, and the Kevala, or only knowledge attained by MAHÁVÍRA on the north bank of the Rijupálíká, under a Sál tree, on the tenth of the light fortnight Vaiśákha, in the fourth watch of the day, whilst the moon was in the asterism Hasta: INDRA instantly hastened to the spot, attended by thousands of deities, who all did homage to the Saint, and attended him on his progress to Apápapuri, in Behár, where he commenced his instructions on a stage erected for the purpose by the deities, a model of which is not uncommonly represented in Jain temples. The following is the introductory lecture ascribed to MAHÁVÍRA by his biographer.

“The world is without bounds, like a formidable ocean; its cause is action (Karma) which is as the seed of the tree. The being (Jīva) invested with body, but devoid of judgment, goes like a well-sinker ever downwards by the acts it performs, whilst the embodied being which has attained purity goes ever upwards by its own acts, like the builder of a palace. Let not any one injure life, whilst bound in the bonds of action; but be as assiduous in cherishing the life of another as his own. Never let any one speak falsehood, but always speak the truth. Let every one who has a bodily form avoid giving pain to others as much as to himself. Let no one take property not given to him, for wealth is like the external life of men, and he who takes away such wealth commits as it were murder. Associate not with women, for it is the destruction of life: let the wise observe continence, which binds them to the Supreme. Be not encumbered with a family, for by the anxiety it involves the person separated from it falls like an ox too heavily laden. If it be not in their power to shun these more subtle destroyers of life, let those who desire so to do avoid at least the commission of all gross offences.”

When MAHÁVÍRA’s fame began to be widely diffused, it attracted the notice of the Brahmans of Magadha, and several of their most eminent teachers undertook to refute his doctrines. Instead of effecting their purpose, however, they became converts, and constituted his Gaṇadharas, heads of schools, the disciples of MAHĀVIRĀ and teachers of his doctrines, both orally and scripturally. It is of some interest to notice them in detail, as the epithets given to them are liable to be misunderstood, and to lead to erroneous notions respecting their character and history.

This is particularly the case with the first, INDRA-BHŪTI, or GAUTAMA, who has been considered as the same with the GAUTAMA of the Bauddhas, the son of MĀYĀDEVĪ, and author of the Indian metaphysics¹. That any connexion exists between the Jain and the Brāhmaṇa Sage is, at least, very doubtful; but the GAUTAMA of the Bauddhas, the son of SUDDHODANA and MĀYĀ, was a Kshattriya, a prince of the royal or warrior caste. All the Jain traditions make their GAUTAMA a Brahman, originally of the Gotra, or tribe of GOTAMA Ḍishi, a division of the Brahmans well known, and still existing in the South of India. These two persons therefore cannot be identified, whether they be historical or fictitious personages.

INDRABHŪTI, AGNIBHŪTI, and VĀYUBHŪTI are described as the sons of VASUBHŪTI, a Brahman of the Gotama tribe, residing at Govara, a village in Magadha: from their race, HEMACHANDRA, in the Commentary on the Vocabulary*, observes, they are all called GAUTAMAS. VYAKTA and SUDHARMÁ were the sons of DHANAMITRA and DHAMMILLA, two Brahmans of Kollaka, the former of the Bharadwája, and the latter of the Agnivaiśya tribe. MAÑDITA and MAURYA-PUTRA were half-brothers, the sons of VIJAYADEVí by DHANADEVÁ and MAURYA, two Brahmans of the Vá-sishtha and Kúśyapa races, but cousins by the mother's side, and consequently, according to the custom of the country, it is stated, the one took the other's widow to wife upon his decease. AKAMPITA was the son of a Maithili Brahman, of the Gautama tribe; ACHALABHRÁTÁ, of a Brahman of Oude, of the Hárita family; METÁRYA was a Brahman of Vatsa, of the Kauñdinya tribe; and PRABHÁSA, a Brahman of the same race, but a native of Rájagriha in Behár. These are the eleven Gañadharas, or Gañádhipas, holders or masters of Jain schools, although, before their conversion, learned in the four Vedas, and teaching the doctrines contained in them.

These converts to Jain principles are mostly made in the same manner: each comes to the Saint, prepared to overwhelm him with shame, when he salutes them mildly by name, tells them the subject that excites their unuttered doubts and solves the difficulty, not always very satisfactorily or distinctly, it must be admitted; but the whole is an epitome of the Jain notions on those subjects which chiefly engage the attention of the Hindu philosophers.

INDRABHÚTI doubts whether there be life (Jíva) or not—MAHÁVÍRA says there is, and that it is the vessel of virtue and vice, or where would be the use of acts of virtue or piety.

AGNIBHÚTI questions if there be acts (Karma), or not, to which MAHÁVÍRA replies in the affirmative, and that from them proceed all bodily pleasure and pain, and the various migrations of the living principle through different forms.

VÁYUBHÚTI doubts if life be not body, which the Sage denies, as the objects of the senses may be remembered after the senses cease to act, even after death, that is, in a succeeding state of existence occasionally.

VYAKTA questions the reality of elementary matter, referring it with the Vedántis to illusion; the Sage replies that the doctrine of vacuity is false, illustrating his position rather obscurely by asking if there are no other worlds than the Gandharva, cities of dreams, or castles in the air.

SUDHARMÁ imagines that the same kind of bodies which are worn in one life will be assumed in another, or that a human being must be born again amongst mankind; for as the tree is always of the same nature as the seed, so must the consequences of acts, in a peculiar capacity, lead to results adapted to a similar condition. This MAHÁVÍRA contradicts, and says that causes and effects are not necessarily of the same nature, as horn, and similar materials are convertible into arrow-barbs, and the like.

MANDITA has not made up his mind on the subjects of bondage and liberation, (Bandha and Moksha); the Jina explains the former to be connexion with and dependence on worldly acts, whilst the latter is total detachment from them, and independence of them effected by knowledge.

MAURYAPUTRA doubts of the existence of gods, to which MAHÁVÍRA opposes the fact of the presence of INDRA, and the rest around his throne. They cannot bear the odour of mere mortality, he adds; but they never fail to attend at the birth, inauguration, and other passages of the life of a Jina.

AKAMPITA is disposed to disbelieve the existence of the spirits of hell, because he cannot see them; but the Sage says that they are visible to those possessing certain knowledge, of whom he is one.

ACHALABHRÁTÁ is sceptical as to the distinction between vice and virtue, for which MAHÁVÍRA rebukes him, and desires him to judge of them by their fruits: length of days, honorable birth, health, beauty and prosperity being the rewards in this life of virtue; and the reverse of these the punishments of vice.

METÁRYA questions a future existence, because life having no certain form must depend on elementary form, and consequently perish with it; but MAHÁVÍRA replies, that life is severally present in various elementary aggregates to give them consciousness, and existing independent of them, may go elsewhere when they are dissolved. He adds, in confirmation of the doctrine, that the Śrutis and Smṛitis, that is, the scriptural writings of the Brāhmaṇas, assert the existence of other worlds.

The last of the list is PRABHÁSA, who doubts if there be such a thing as Nirván, that state of non-entity which it is the object of a Jaina saint to attain. The solution is not very explicit. Nirván is declared to be the same with Moksha, liberation, and Karmakshaya, abrogation of acts, and that this is real is proved by the authority of the Veda, and is visibly manifested in those who acquire true knowledge.

According to this view of the Jain system, therefore, we find the vital principle recognised as a real existence animating in distinct portions distinct bodies, and condemned to suffer the consequences of its actions by migrations through various forms. The reality of elementary matter is also asserted, as well as of gods, demons, heaven, and hell. The final state of the vital and sentient principle is left rather obscure, but as its actual and visible exemption from human acts is taught, it follows that it is exempt from their consequences or repeated births in various shapes, and therefore ceases to be in any sensible or suffering form. It is unnecessary to dwell longer on the subject here, as we shall have occasion to recur to it.

After the conversion of these Brahmans and their disciples, MAHÁVÍRA instructed them further in his doctrines, and they again taught them to others, becoming the heads of separate schools. AKAMPIṢA and ACHALABHRÁTÁ, however, and METÁRYA and PRABHÁSA taught in common, so that the eleven Ganádhipas established but nine Gáñas or classes*.

Having thus attained the object of his penance and silence, MAHÁVÍRA, attended by his disciples, wandered about to different places, disseminating the Jain belief, and making numerous converts. The scene of his labours is mostly along the Ganges, in the modern districts of Behár and Alláhábád, and principally at the cities of Kausámbí and Rájagríha, under the kings Śasáníka and Śreṇíka, both of whom are Jains. The occurrences described relate more to the disciples of the Saint than to himself, and there are some curious matters of an apparently historical character. There is also a prophetic account of HEMACHANDRA himself, and his patron KUMÁRA PÁLA of Guzerat, put into the mouth of MAHÁVÍRA; but these are foreign to our present purpose, which is confined to the progress of the Jain sage.

MAHÁVÍRA having completed the period of his earthly career, returned to Apápapuri, whither he was attended by a numerous concourse of followers of various designations. However fanciful the enumeration, the list is not uninstructive, as it displays the use of various terms to signify different orders of one sect, and not, as has been sometimes erroneously supposed, the sect itself. Śramaṇas, Sádhus and Śravaks may be Jains, but they are not necessarily so, nor do they singly designate all the individuals of that persuasion. Víra's train consists of Sádhus, holy men, fourteen thousand; Sádhvis, holy women, thirty-six thousand; Śramaṇas, or ascetics, versed in the fourteen Púrvas, three hundred; Avadhijnánis, those knowing the limits or laws, one thousand and three hundred; Kevalts, or detached from acts, seven hundred; Manovits, possessors of intellectual wisdom, five hundred; Vádis, controversialists, four hundred; Śravakas, the male laity, one lakh and fifty-nine thousand; and Śravikás, female hearers of the word, double that number, or three lakhs and eighteen thousand. The only Ganadharas present were GAUTAMA and SUDHARMÁ, the other nine having attained felicity, or having died before their master.

The period of his liberation having arrived, MAHÁVÍRA resigned his breath, and his body was burned by ŚAKRA and other deities, who divided amongst them such parts as were not destroyed by the flames, as the teeth and bones, which they preserved as reliques; the ashes of the pile were distributed amongst the assistants: the gods erected a splendid monument on the spot, and then returned to their respective heavens. These events occurred on the day of new moon, in the month Kártik, when MAHÁVÍRA was seventy-two years of age, thirty of which were spent in social duties, and the rest in religious avocations, and he died two hundred and fifty years after the preceding Jina, PÁRSVANÁTH: no other date is given, but in the passage, in the prophetic strain above alluded to, it is mentioned that KUMÁRA PÁLA will found *Anahilla Pattan, and become the disciple of HEMACHANDRA, one thousand six hundred and sixty-nine years after the death of MAHÁVÍRA.

* [formerly called Analaváta.]

The conversion of KUMÁRA PÁLA occurred about A. D. 1174*, and consequently the last Jina expired about five hundred years before the Christian era. According to other authorities the date assigned to this event is commonly about a century and a half earlier, or before Christ six hundred and sixty-three¹, but HEMACHANDRA is a preferable guide, although, in point of actual chronology, his date is probably not more to be depended upon than those derived from other sources.

The doctrines of the Jains, which constitute the philosophy of their system, it is not part of the present plan to discuss: but a few of the leading tenets, as derived from original authorities, may be here briefly adverted to. It is the more necessary to dwell on the subject, as the chief opinions of the sect of Jina, as described elsewhere, have for the most part been taken from verbal communication, or the controversial writings of the Brahmans.

An eternal and presiding first cause forms no part of the Jain creed, nor do the Jains admit of soul or spirit as distinct from the living principle. All existence is divisible into two heads—Life (Jíva) or the living and sentient principle; and Inertia or Ajīva, the various modifications of inanimate matter. Both these are uncreated and imperishable. Their forms and conditions may change, but they are never destroyed; and with the exception of the unusual cases in which a peculiar living principle ceases to be subject to bodily acts, both life and matter proceed in a certain course, and at stated periods the same forms, the same characters, and the same events are repeated.

¹ Colonel MACKENZIE, on the information of the Belligola Jains, says Vardhamána attained beatitude 2464 years before the year 1801, which is 663 years before Christ. Mr. COLEBROOKE observes, that the Jains of Bengal reckon Vardhamána to have lived 580 years before Vikramáditya, which is A. C. 636.

To proceed, however; according to the original authorities, all objects, sensible or abstract, are arranged under nine categories, termed Tattwas, truths or existences, which we shall proceed to notice in some detail*.

I. Jīva, Life, or the living and sentient principle, as existing in various forms, but especially reducible to two classes, those with, and those without mobility. The first comprises animals, men, demons, and gods—the second, all combinations of the four elements, earth, water, fire, air, as minerals, vapours, meteors, and tempests—and all the products of the vegetable kingdom. They are again arranged in five classes according to their possession of as many Indriyas, or sensible properties. The wholly unconscious bodies to ordinary apprehension, but which have a subtle vitality perceptible to saintly and super-human beings, have the property of form: such are minerals, and the like. Snails, worms, and insects, in general, have two properties—form and face. Lice, fleas, and the like have three properties, or form, face, and the organ of smell. Bees, gnats, and the rest have, in addition to these, vision; whilst animals, men, demons, and gods have form, vision, hearing, smell, and taste. To these five predicates of vital beings two others are sometimes added, and they are said to be Sanjninh and Asanjninh, or, born by procreation, or spontaneously generated. Again, these seven orders are distinguished as complete or incomplete, making altogether fourteen classes of living things. According to the acts done or suffered in each condition, the vital principle migrates to an inferior or superior grade, until it is emancipated from bodily acts altogether. It is a peculiarity of the Jain notions of life, that it is always adapted to the body it animates, and diminishes with the gnat, and expands to the elephant, a notion that is treated with just ridicule by the Brahmans. Generically, it is defined to be without beginning or end, endowed with attributes of its own, agent and enjoyer, conscious, subtle, proportionate to the body it animates; through sin it passes into animals, or goes to hell; through virtue and vice combined it passes into men, and through virtue alone ascends to heaven; through the annihilation of both vice and virtue it obtains emancipation.

II. Ajiva, the second predicate of existence, comprises objects or properties devoid of consciousness and life. These seem to be vaguely and variously classed, and to be in general incapable of interpretation; but the enumeration is commonly fourteen, like the modification of vitality. They are Dharmástikáya, Adharmástikáya, and Ákásástikáya, each comprehending three varieties. Kála, or time, is the tenth; and Pudgala, or elementary matter, in four modifications, completes the series.

It is not very easy to understand these technicalities, for the etymology of the words is of little avail. Asti-káya indicates the existence of body, "Body is"; whilst Dharma signifies virtue, and Adharma, vice; but Dharma means also peculiar function or office, in which sense it seems to be here intended, thus—Dharmástikáya is defined to be that which facilitates the motion of animate or inanimate bodies, as water for fish. Adharmástikáya is that which impedes or stops their motion. Ákásástikáya is the principle of repulsion, that which keeps bodies separate, or space: the varieties of these are only in degree, of little, more, and complete. Time is sufficiently intelligible, but the Jains indulge in modifications of it infinitely more extravagant than those for which the Hindus are reproached; thus after enumerating days, weeks, months, and years, we have the *Palya, or Palyopama, a period measured by the time in which a vast well, one hundred Yojans every way, filled with minute hairs so closely packed that a river might be hurried over them without penetrating the interstices, could be emptied at the rate of one hair in a century. A

* [See Hemachandra's Abhidh. 132, and p. 304.]

Ságaropama is one hundred million millions of Palyas, and an Avasarpiṇí and Utsarpiṇí, which make up a great age, consists each of one hundred million millions of Ságaras. Pudgala is atomic matter, distinguished like the first three categories, by being combined in three degrees—little, much, and most, whilst it adds a fourth state, or that of Paramánu, primitive, subtle, indivisible, and uncombined.

III. The third Tattwa is Puṇya, Good, or whatever is the cause of happiness to living beings: the subdivisions of this category are forty-two: it will be sufficient here to enumerate a few of the principal.

1. Uchchhairgotra, high birth, rank, or the respect of mankind.
2. Manushyagati, the state of man, either as obtained from some other form of being or continuance in it.
3. Suragati, the state of divinity, Godhead.
4. Panchendriya, the state of superior vitality, or possession of five organs of sense.
5. Panchadeha, the possession of body, or form of one of five kinds:

Audárika, elementary—that arising from the aggregation of elements, as the bodies of men and beasts.

Vaikriya, transmigrated—that assumed in consequence of acts, as the forms of spirits and gods.

Ahárika, adventitious, one assumed, such as that of the Púrvadharas, of one cubit in stature, when they went to see the Tirthankaras in Mahávidehakshetra.

Taijasa, the form obtained by suppressing mortal wants, in which state fire can be ejected from the body.

Kármaña, the form which is the necessary consequence of acts. These two last are necessarily connected from all time, and can only be disunited by final liberation, or Moksha.

Other varieties of 'Good' are colour, odour, flavour, touch, warmth, coolness, and the like.

IV. Pápa, or 'Ill', in contradistinction to the preceding, and implying that which is the cause of unhappiness to mankind: there are eighty-two kinds;

As the five Avarañas, or difficulties in acquiring as many gradations of holy or divine wisdom. Five Antaráyas, disappointments, or impediments, as not obtaining what is about to be presented, not being able to enjoy an object of fruition when in possession of it, and want of vigour though in bodily health. Four Darśanávasáñas, obstructions, or impediments to information derivable from the senses, or the understanding or to the acquirement of divine knowledge. Five states of sleep, inferior birth, pain, as a condition of existence, as when condemned to purgatory, belief in false gods, defect of size or shape, and all the human passions and infirmities—as anger, pride, covetousness, &c., including, amongst the ills of life, laughter and love.

V. Asrava is that source from which the evil acts of living beings proceed. The varieties are the five Indriyas, or organs of sense; the four Kasháyas, or passions, as wrath, pride, covetousness, and deceit; the five *Avrata*s, non-observance of positive commands, as lying, stealing, &c. and three Yogas, addition or attachment of the mind, speech, and body to any act; Kriyás, or acts, of which twenty-six varieties are specified as those performed with any part of the body, or with the instrumentality of a weapon, or the like—those prompted by feelings of hate or wrath—those which are inceptive, progressive, or conclusive—those performed by oneself, or through another creature—those which are suggested by impiety, or disbelief in the doctrine of the Tirthankaras.

VI. The sixth Tattwa is termed Samvara, and is that by which acts are collected or impeded. There are fifty-seven varieties classed under six heads.

1. Samiti, keeping the attention properly alive, so as to see immediately if an insect is in the way, to refrain from uttering what should not be said, to distinguish any of the forty-two defects in food given as alms, taking or relinquishing any thing indifferently, and avoiding or abandoning unfit things.

2. Gupti, secrecy, or reserve of three kinds, or in mind, speech and person.

3. Parishahá, endurance or patience, as when a person has taken a vow of abstemiousness he must bear hunger and thirst; so he must endure heat and cold, when he practices the immovable posture of Jain abstraction; if he is disappointed in what he has laboured or begged for, he must not murmur; and if he is reviled or even beaten, he must patiently submit.

4. Yatidharma, the duties of an ascetic; these are ten in number: patience, gentleness, integrity, and disinterestedness, abstraction, mortification, truth, purity, poverty, and continence.

5. Bhávaná, conviction or conclusion, such as that worldly existences are not eternal, that there is no refuge after death, that life is perpetually migrating through the eighty-four lakhs of living forms, that life is one or many: it also includes perception of the source whence evil acts proceed, and the like.

The sixth division of this class is Cháritra, practice or observance, of five sorts: Sámáyika, conventional, or the practice and avoidance of such actions as are permitted or prescribed; Chhedopasthápaniya, prevention of evil, as of the destruction of animal life; Pariháraváisuddhi, purification by such mortification and penance as are enjoined by the example of ancient saints and sages. Sulakshmasamparáya, the practices of those pious men who have attained a certain degree of eminence; and Yathákhyátam, the same after all the impediments and impurities of human nature are overcome or destroyed.

VII. Nirjará, the seventh Tattwa, is the religious practice that destroys mortal impurities, or, in other words, penance: it is of two kinds, external and internal; the first comprehends fasting, continence, silence, and bodily suffering; the second, repentance, piety, protection of the virtuous, study, meditation, and disregard, or rejection of both virtue and vice.

VIII. Bandha is the integral association of life with acts, as of milk with water, fire with a red hot iron ball; it is of four kinds: Prakrīti, the natural disposition or nature of a thing; Sthiti, duration, or measure of time, through which life continues; Anubhága, feeling; or sensible quality; Pradeśa, atomic individuality. The characters of this principle are illustrated by a confection: 1. According to its natural properties it cures phlegm, bile, &c.; 2. it remains efficient but for a given period; 3. it is sweet, bitter, sour, &c.; and 4. it is divisible into large or small proportions, retaining each the properties of the whole mass.

XI. The last of the nine principles is Moksha, or liberation of the vital spirit from the bonds of action; it is of nine sorts:

1. Satpadaprariúpaña. The determination of the real nature of things, the consequence of a finite course of progress through different stages of being and purification. It is attainable only by living creatures of the highest order, or those having the five organs of sense; by those possessed of the Trasakúya, or a body endowed with consciousness and mobility; by those beings which are engendered, not self-produced; by those which have reached the fifth Cháritra, or exemption from human infirmity; by those which are in the Ksháyika Samyaktwa, or that state of perfection in which elementary or material existence is destroyed; by those no longer requiring material existence; by those who have acquired the Kevalajnána, the only knowledge, and the Kevaladarśana, or only vision.

2. Dravyapramáña, as regulated by the fitness of the things or persons to be emancipated.

3. Kshetrapramáña, depending on the essentiality of certain holy places at which only it can be obtained.

4. Sparśana, contact, or identity of the indiguated living principle with that of the universe, or any part of it.

5. Kāla, the times or ages at which emancipation is attainable; or the periods spent in various transmigrations.

6. Antara, the difference of temperaments or dispositions.

7. Bhāga, the existence of the imperishable part of all living bodies in which the purified essences or Siddhas reside.

8. Bhāva, the nature or property of that pure existence which has attained the Kevalajñāna, and other perfections essential to final liberation.

9. Alpabahutwa, the degree or ratio in which different classes of beings obtain emancipation¹.

From the details of these nine Tattwas the sum of the whole Jain system may be collected, but they form only the text on which further subtleties are founded, and they leave the end and scope of all the doctrine or the attainment of ultimate liberation singularly indistinct.

The Moksha of the Jains is exemption from the incidents of life, and above all from the necessity of

varieties are rather in the requisite conditions for attaining being born again; but in what state the living principle subsists after it is so exempted, does not very satisfactorily appear. In one state indeed the bodily individuality remains, or that of Jīwanmukti, liberation during life, whilst from most of the subdivisions of Moksha, it follows that the Siddhas, the pure existences, correspond with our notions of spiritual beings, having an impassive and inappreciable form, variable at will, capable of infinite contraction or dilation, and wholly void of feeling or passion. This is not incompatible with their enjoyment of Nirván, another term for Moksha, and which, as Mr. COLEBROOKE observes, meaning literally, extinct or gone out as a fire, set as a heavenly luminary, defunct as a saint who has passed away, implies profound calm. "It is not annihilation," he concludes*, "but unceasing apathy which they, 'the Jains and Buddhas,' understand to be the extinction of their saints, and which they esteem to be supreme felicity worthy to be sought by practice of mortification as well as by acquisition of knowledge."

Besides the notions exhibited in the detail of the nine Tattwas, the Jains are known in controversial writings by the title Saptavádis, or Saptabhangis, the disputers or refuters of seven positions: more correctly speaking, they are reconcilers, or could be so, of seven contradictory assertions, evincing a sceptical character which justifies another epithet which they acknowledge, of Syádvádís, or assertors of possibilities; the seven positions are the following:

* [Essays, p. 259.]

1. A thing is; 2. it is not; 3. it is and it is not; 4. it is not definable; 5. it is, but is not definable; 6. it is not, neither is it definable; 7. it is and it is not, and is not definable. Now these positions imply the doctrines of the different schools, the Sánkhya, Vedánta, and others, with regard to the world, to life, and to spirit, and are met in every case by the Jains with the reply, Syádvá, It may be so sometimes; that is, whatever of these dogmas is advanced will be true in some respects, and not in others; correct under some circumstances, and not under others; and they are therefore not entitled to implicit trust, nor are they irreconcileable. There is one inference to be drawn from this attempt to reconcile the leading doctrines of the principal schools, of some importance to the history of the Jain doctrines, and it renders it probable that they were posterior to all the rest. As this reasoning however has been opposed by RÁMÁNUJA, it dates earlier than the twelfth century.

Liberation during life and, as a necessary consequence, exemption after it from future birth implies the abandonment of eight classes of Karmas, or acts, four of which are noxious and four innoxious; they are all included under the Tattwa Pápa, ILL, as above noticed, but are also more especially detailed. To the first order belong the following:

knowledge, from simple comprehension to the only true wisdom, as so many steps to final liberation;

• Darśanávaraṇa, disbelief in the doctrines of the Jain Saints;

Mohaniya, hesitation in obeying the injunctions of the Jain code, or doubt as to their importance and the consequences of their neglect;

• Antarāya, impeding or vexing those engaged in seeking liberation.

The second class comprises:

Náma, pride of name; Gotra, pride of birth; and Āyushka, attachment to bodily existence.

These essential principles of the faith are common to all classes of Jains, but some differences occur in their Duties as they are divided into religious or lay orders, Yatis and Śrāvakas. Implicit belief in the doctrines and actions of the Tirthankaras is, of course, obligatory on both; but the former are expected to follow a life of abstinence, taciturnity, and continence, whilst the latter add to their moral and religious code the practical worship of the Tirthankaras, and profound reference for their more pious brethren. The moral code of the Jains is expressed in five Mahá-vratas, or great duties: Refraining from injury to life, truth, honesty, chastity, and freedom from worldly desires. There are four Dharmas, or merits—liberality, gentleness, piety, and penance; and three sorts of restraint—government of the mind, the tongue, and the person. To these are superadded a number of minor instructions or prohibitions, sometimes of a beneficial and sometimes of a trivial, or even ludicrous tendency, such as to abstain, at certain seasons, from salt, flowers, green fruit, and roots, honey, grapes, and tobacco; to drink water thrice strained; never to leave a liquid uncovered, lest an insect should be drowned in it; not to deal in soap, natron, indigo, and iron; and never to eat in the dark lest a fly should be swallowed. Religious characters wear a piece of cloth over their mouths to prevent insects from flying into them, and carry a brush under their arms to sweep the place on which they are about to sit, to remove any ants or other living creatures out of the way of danger. Upon the whole, the doctrine of the Jainas is a system of quietism calculated to render those who follow it perfectly innoxious, and to inspire them with apathetic indifference towards both this world and the next.

The ritual of the Jains is as simple as their moral code. The Yati, or devotee, dispenses with acts of worship at his pleasure, and the lay votary is only bound to visit daily a temple where some of the images of the Tirthankaras are erected, walk round it three times, make an obeisance to the images, with an offering of some trifle, usually fruit or flowers, and pronounce some such Mantra, or prayer, as the following: “Namo Arihantánam, Namo Siddhánam, Namo Aryánam, Namo Upájyánam, Namo Löe Sabba Sahúnam—Salutation to the Arhats, to the Pure Existences, to the Sages, to the Teachers, to all the Devout in the world.” A morning prayer is also repeated: “Ichchhámi khamá Śamaño bandiyon, jo man jáye nisiáye; máthena vandámi—I beg forgiveness, oh Lord, for your slave, whatever evil thoughts the night may have produced—I bow with my head.” The worshipper then perhaps remains to hear read part of the Kalpasútra or Bhaktámara, or some narrative of one or other of the Tirthankaras, and the devotion of their followers, and proceeds to his daily occupations.

The reader in a Jain temple is a Yati, or religious character; but the ministrant priest, the attendant on the images, the receiver of offerings, and conductor of all usual ceremonies is a Brahman. It is a curious peculiarity in the Jain system, that they should have no priests of their own, but it is the natural consequence of the doctrine and example of the Tirthankaras, who performed no rites, either vicariously or for themselves, and gave no instruction as to their observance. It shews also the true character of this form of faith, that it was a departure from established practices, the observance of which was held by the Jain teachers to be matter of indifference, and which none of any credit would consent to regulate; the laity were, therefore, left to their former priesthood, as far as outward ceremonies were concerned.

The objects of worship are properly only the Tirthankaras, but the Jains do not deny the existence of the Hindu gods, and admit such of them as they have chosen to connect with the adventures of their saints, according to a classification of their own, to a share in the worship offered to their human superiors.

According to the Mythology which they have adopted and modified the Jains reckon four classes of divine beings whom they name Bhuvanapatis, Vyan̄taras, Jyotishkas, and Vaimānikas; the first comprises ten orders: the progeny of the Asuras, Serpents, Garuda, the Dikpālas, Fire, Air, the Ocean, Thunder and Lightning,—who are supposed to reside in the several hells or regions below the Earth. The second has eight orders: the Piśāchas, Bhūtas, Kinnaras, Gandharvas, and other monstrous or terrestrial divinities inhabiting mountains, woods, and forests, as well as the lower regions, or air. The third has five orders: the Sun, Moon, Planets, Asterisms, and other heavenly bodies. The fourth includes the Gods of present and past Kalpas. Of the first kind are those born in the Heavens, Saudharma, Ísána, Mahendra, Brahmá, Sanatkumára, Śukra, and others to the number of twelve, or in the Kalpas, when SUDHARMÁ and the rest were severally presiding Deities. The last class reside in two divisions of five and of nine heavens—the five termed Vijaya, Vaijayanti, &c.; the second termed Anuttara, because there are none beyond them, as they crown the triple construction of the universe. In the sovereignty of the hosts of heaven a great number of Indras are recognised, but of these two are always specified as the chief, ŚUKRA and ÍSÁNA, one regent of the north, the other of the south heaven: the former alone has eighty-four thousand fellow gods, each of whom has myriads of associates and attendants.

Above all these rank in dignity, and as objects of worship, the twenty-four Tirthankaras, or with those of the past and of the future periods seventy-two. Allusion is made by HEMACHANDRA, in his life of MAHÁ-VÍRA, to a hundred and one, and the same work specifies four Súsvat or eternal Jinas, RÍSHABHÁNANA, CHANDRÁNANA, VÁRISENA, and VARDDHAMÁNA. What is meant by them is not explained, and they are not recognised by all Jains.

The presence of Brahman ministrants, or the lapse of time and the tendency of the native mind to multiply objects of veneration, seems to have introduced different innovations into the worship of the Jains in different parts of Hindustan; and in upper India the ritual in use is often intermixed with formulæ derived from the Tantras, and belonging more properly to the Śaiva and Śákta worship. Images of the Bhairavas and Bhairavis, the fierce attendants on Śiva and Kálí, take their place in Jain temples, and at suitable seasons the Jains equally with the Hindus address their adoration to SARASVATÍ and *DEVÍ*¹.

In the South of India, from the account given by Colonel MACKENZIE, it appears that the Jains observe all the Brahmanical Sanskáras, or essential ceremonies. This is not the case in Upper India, and the only rites followed are the Initiation of the infant, twelve days after birth, by repeating a Mantra over it, making a circular mark with the sandal and perfumes on the top of the head; Marriage and Cremation, which are much the same as those of the Brahmins, omitting the Mantras of the Vedas. Śráddhas, obsequial ceremonies at stated periods, are not performed by the Jains in Upper Hindustan.

The festivals of the Jains are peculiar to themselves, and occur especially on days consecrated by the birth or death of some of the principal Tírthánkaras, especially the two last, Párvanáth and Vardhamána. The places where these events occurred are also objects of pilgrimage, and very numerous assemblages of devout pilgrims occur at them at different seasons: thus, in Behár, a very celebrated place of resort is the scene of Párvanáth's liberation; the mountain Samet Śikhara, or Parasnáth, near *Pachete*¹; and another of equal sanctity, the scene of Vardhamána's departure from earth, is at *Pápapuri*², in the blem, and the Shodásha Karana Pújá ends with a Lakshmi Stotra, or Hymn, addressed to the Goddess of Prosperity.

² It is also written Apápapuri and Párapuri, under which same province. Pilgrims come from all parts of India to these places at all seasons, but the principal Melás are held at the former in Mágh, and in Kártik at the latter. On the western side of India the mountains of *Abú*¹ and Girinár are the great scenes of pilgrimage, being covered with Jain temples and remains. RISHABHA DEVA and NEMINÁTH seem to be the favourite divinities in that quarter.

Besides these particular festivals, the Jains observe several that are common to the Hindus, as the Vasantayátrá, or spring festival, the Sripanchamí, and others; they also hold in veneration certain of the Lunar days, as the 2d, 5th, 8th, 11th and 12th; on these no new work should be undertaken, no journey commenced, and fasting, or abstinence at least, and continence should be observed.

The origin of the Jain faith is immersed in the obscurity which invests all remote history amongst the Hindus. That it is the most recent of all the systems pursued in Hindustan is rendered highly probable by the extravagances in which it deals, by the doctrines it opposes to those of all other schools, and by the comparatively recent date of many Jain authors of celebrity, and of numerous monumental relics; but latter name, it and other celebrated Jaina shrines in Behár are described by a Native traveller, a Jain, in the service of Colonel MACKENZIE, in the Calcutta Magazine for June, 1823.

at what period it actually took its rise it is not easy to determine¹. Mr. COLEBROOKE has suggested the probability of the Jain religion being the work of PÁRŚVANÁTH, in the account of whom there is a nearer approach to sober history and credible chronology than in the narratives of his predecessors. This would throw back the origin of the Jain faith to the ninth century before the Christian era, admitting the Jain chronology of VARDDHAMÁNA's existence; but it is difficult to concur in the accuracy of so remote a date, and whatever indirect evidence on the subject is procurable is opposed to such a belief.

It has been supposed that we have notices of the Jaina sect as far back as the time of the Macedonian invasion of India, or at least at the period at which MEGASTHENES was sent ambassador to SANDRACOPTUS, and that these notices are recorded by STRABO and ARRIAN. The nature of the expressions which those and other writers have employed has been canvassed by Mr. COLEBROOKE *, and shewn satisfactorily to establish the existence at that time of the regular Brahmins, as well as of other sects: what those sects were, however, it was no part of his object to enquire, and he has left it still to be ascertained how far it can be concluded that the Jainas were intended.

¹ Major DELAMAINÉ observes, "the usual idea of the Jains being a modern sect may not be erroneous: the doctrines originating with Rishabha, and continued by Arhanta, dividing at periods of schism into more distinct classes, of which the Jains or Śrāvaks, as now established, form one, and the modern Buddhas, as in Burma, Siam, Ceylon, Tibet, &c. another." T. R. A. S. I, 427.—"Were I disposed to speculate on the origin of the Jains from the striking coincidences of doctrine and religious usages between them and the Buddhists, I should be led to conjecture that they were originally a sect of Buddhists." Mr. ERSKINE, Bombay Trans., III, 502.—"It is certainly probable, as remarked by Dr. HAMILTON and Major DELAMAINÉ, that the Gautama of the Jinas and of the Baudhas is the same personage, and this leads to the further surmise that both these sects are branches of one stock.—Both have adopted the Hindu Pantheon, or assemblage of subordinate deities, both disclaim the authority of the Vedas, and both elevate their pre-eminent saints to divine supremacy." Mr. Colebrooke, Trans. R. A. S. I, 521.

Much perplexity in the Greek accounts of the Brahmins Gymnosopists has, no doubt, occurred from their not having been acquainted with the subdivision of the priestly caste into the four orders of student, householder, hermit, and mendicant, and therefore they describe the Brahman sometimes as living in towns, sometimes in woods, sometimes observing celibacy, and sometimes married, sometimes as wearing clothes, and sometimes as going naked; contradictions which, though apparently irreconcileable if the same individuals or classes be meant, were appreciated by the shrewdness of BAYLE more justly than he was himself aware of¹, and are all explained by the Acháras,

* [and by Lassen, Ind. Alt., II, 700 ff., 710.]

¹ "It may be that they (the Brachmanes) did not follow the same institutes in all ages, and that with a distinction of time one might reconcile some of the variations of the authors who have spoken of them."—Article Brachmans, Note C. Harris (I, 454) also has rightly estimated the real character of the Ger-

or institutes of the Hindus, as affecting the various periods of life and corresponding practices of Brahmanical devotion.

As far, therefore, as the customs or observances of the Gymnosophists are described, we have no reason to conclude that any but the followers of the Vedas are intended, and the only part of the account applicable to any other sect is the term Sarmanes, or Ser- manes, or Samanaeans, applied to one division of the Sophists or Sages. This name, as Mr. COLEBROOKE observes, seems to bear some affinity to the Śramaṇas, or ascetics of the Jains or Buddhas, but we can derive no positive conclusion from a resemblance, which may possibly be rather imaginary than real, and the object of which, after all, is far from being the individual property of any sect, but is equally applicable to the ascetic of every religious system. As distinct from the Brahmans, the Sarmanes will be equally distinct from the Jains; for the Brahmans, it is said by PORPHYRY, are of one race; and the Samanaeans are selected from all the tribes, and consist of persons choosing to prosecute divine studies,—precisely the independent Sannyási or Gosáin of modern times, few persons of which description belong to the order of the Brahmans, or are united with the rest by any community of origin or peculiarity of faith.

ration of the existence of the Jains, and it may be admitted that this is a better proof than the preceding, as the *Pramnæ are declared to be the opposers of the Brahmans, which is no where mentioned of the Sarmanes. This expression is said to designate the Jains, but this is far from certain: the term is probably derived from Pramána, proof, evidence, and is especially the right of the followers of the logical school, who are usually termed Prámánikas: it is applicable, however, to any sect which advocates positive or ocular proof in opposition to written dogmas, or belief in scriptural authority, and is in that sense more correctly an epithet of the Bauddha sectaries than of the Jains, who admit the legends and worship the deities of the Puráñas, and who hold it the height of impiety to question the written doctrines of their own teachers. The proofs from classical writers, therefore, are wholly inadequate to the decision of the antiquity of the Jains, and we are still entirely left to sources of a less satisfactory description.

All writers on the Jains entitled to our attention agree in admitting an intimate connexion between them and the Bauddhas; the chief analogies have been above adverted to, and the inference of later origin is justly founded on the extravagant exaggerations of the system adopted by the Jains. Their identity of origin rests chiefly upon the name of GAUTAMA, which appears as that of VARDDHAMÁNA's chief pupil, and as the legislator of the Buddha nations in the east. The dates also assigned to both are not far removed; the apotheosis of the Buddha GAUTAMA occurring five hundred and forty-three years before Christ, and the death of MAHÁVÍRA, the preceptor of the Jain GAUTAMA, about the same time. That there is some connexion may be conceded, but for reasons already assigned it is not likely that the persons are the same; the Jains have not improbably derived their GAUTAMA from that of their predecessors*.

* [See Lassen, Ind. Alt. I, 835, Weber, Ind. Lit. 27.]

No argument for the antiquity of the Jains is derivable from the account given of RISHABHA in the *Bhágavata Puráńa. He was not a seceder from the true faith, although the mistaken imitation of his practices is said to have led others into errors, evidently intending the Jain heresy. He is scarcely identifiable, in consequence, with the Jain RISHABHA, the first of the Tirthankaras; but even if that were the case, no confidence could be placed in the authority, as the work is a modern compilation not exceeding, at the most, twelve centuries of antiquity. The refutation of Jain doctrines in the Brahma Sútras is a less questionable testimony of their early existence; but the date of that work is to be yet ascertained. SANKARA ÁCHÁRYA, the commentator on the texts of VYÁSA, affords a more definite approximation; but he will not carry us back above ten centuries. It is also to be observed, that the objects of the attacks of the Sūtras and of ŚANKARA are philosophical and speculative tenets, and these may have been current long before they formed part of a distinct practical system of faith, as promulgated by a class of Bauddhas, the germ of the Jains.

* [Weber, Ueber das Śatrunjaya Mähätmyam, p. 2-6.]

 [V, 5, 28 ff. Vishńu Pur., p. 164, Note.]

However, we may admit from these authorities the existence of the Jains as a distinct sect, above ten or twelve centuries ago; we have reason to question their being of any note or importance much earlier. The Bauddhas, we know from CLEMENS of Alexandria, existed in India in the second century of the Christian æra, and we find them not only the principal objects of Hindu confutation and anathema, but they are mentioned in works of lighter literature referable to that period, in which the Jains are not noticed, nor alluded to: the omission is the more worthy of notice, because, since the Bauddhas disappeared from India, and the Jains only have been known, it will be found that the Hindu writers, whenever they speak of Bauddhas, shew, by the phraseology and practices ascribed to them, that they really mean Jains: the older writers do not make the same mistake, and the usages and expressions which they give to Bauddha personages are not Jain, but Bauddha; with the one they were familiar, the other were yet unknown.

The literature of the Jains themselves is unfavourable to the notion of high antiquity. HEMACHANDRA, one of their greatest writers, flourished in the end of the twelfth century, and the compiler of the Jain Puráńas of the Dekhan is said to have written at the end of the ninth. The Kalpa Sútra professes to have been composed nine hundred and eighty years after the death of MAHÁVÍRA, or fifteen centuries ago; but from internal evidence* it could not have been composed earlier than the twelfth or thirteenth century. Various eminent Jain authors were cotemporary also with MUNJA and BHOJA, princes of Dhár, in the ninth and tenth century , and a number of works seem to have been compiled in the sixteenth century during the tolerant reign of AKBAR.

Of the progress of the Jain faith in the Gangetic provinces of Upper India we have no very satisfactory traces. It may be doubted if they ever extended themselves in Bengal. Behár, according to their own traditions, was the birth-place of VARDDHAMÁNA, and Benares of PÁRŚVANÁTH; and temples and monuments of their teachers are common in both, particularly the former; but all those now existing are of very recent dates¹, and there are no vestiges referable to an intermediate period between the last Tirthankara, and the eighteenth century. At Benares its princes professed the faith of Baudhā as late as the eleventh century, whilst during the same period, as is proved by inscriptions and the historical work of CHANDRAKAVI, the sovereigns of Kanoj and Dehli were of the orthodox persuasion. It is very doubtful, therefore, if the Jains ever formed a leading sect in this part of Hindustan. They were more successful in the west and south.

In Western Márwář, and the whole of the territory subject to the Chálukya princes of Guzerat, the Jain faith became that of the ruling dynasty; but this occurred at no very remote period. The Mohammedan Geographer EDRIŠI states that the king of *Nehrwlá, the capital of Guzerat, worshipped BUDDHA; and we know from the writings of HEMACHANDRA, that he was the apostle of the Jain faith in that kingdom—converting KUMÁRA PÁLA, the monarch of Guzerat, to his creed. This is also an occurrence of the twelfth century, or about 1174. The consequences of this conversion are still apparent in the abundant relics of the Jain faith, and the numbers by whom it is professed in Márwář, Guzerat, and the upper part of the Malabar Coast.

there reason to suspect that the buildings are much older than the inscriptions announce. The most ancient Mundir at that place is reckoned to be but fifty years old.”— Calcutta Magazine, December, 1827.

* [i. e. Analaváta, see p. 304 Note, and Lassen, Ind. Alt., III, 546.]

On the Coromandel side of the Peninsula the Jains were introduced upon the downfall of the Bauddhas, in the reign of AMOGHAVARSHA, king of Toñdai Mañ-dalam, in the ninth century or, according to some traditions, in the eighth. Farther south, in Madurá, the date of their introduction is not known, but they were in power in the eleventh century under KUÑA PÁNDYA. In this, and in the twelfth, they seem to have reached their highest prosperity, and from that period to have declined. KUÑA PÁNDYA became a Śaiva. VISHNU VARDDHANA, Rája of Mysore, was converted from the Jain to the Vaishnava faith in the twelfth century, and about the same time the Lingavant Śaivas deposed and murdered VIJALA, the Jain king of *Kalyán. The sect, however, continued to meet with partial countenance from the kings of Vijayanagar until a comparatively modern date.

The conclusions founded on traditional or historical records are fully supported by the testimony of monuments and inscriptions—the latter of which are exceedingly numerous in the south and west of India. Most of these are very modern—none are earlier than the ninth century. An exception is said to exist in an inscription on a rock at Belligola, recording a grant of land by Chámuñda Ráya to the shrine of GOMATI-ŚVARA, in the year 600 of the Kali age, meaning the Kali of the Jains, which began three years after the death of VARDDHAMÁNA. This inscription, therefore, if it exists, was written about fifty or sixty years before the Christian æra—but it is not clear that any such record is in existence, the fact resting on the oral testimony of the head Pontiff at Belligola: even, if it be legible on the face of the rock, it is of questionable authenticity, as it is perfectly solitary, and no other document of like antiquity has been met with.

The MACKENZIE Collection contains many hundred Jain inscriptions. Of these the oldest record grants made by the princes of *Homchi, a petty state in Mysore. None of them are older than the end of the ninth century. Similar grants, extending through the eleventh and twelfth centuries by the Veñála sovereigns of Mysore, are also numerous, whilst they continue with equal frequency to the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, during the existence of the sovereignty of Vijayanagar. Again, at Abú, under the patronage of the Guzerat princes, we have a number of Jain inscriptions, but the oldest of them bears date Samvat 1245 (A. D. 1189)¹; they multiply in the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries, and are found as late as the middle of the eighteenth—and, finally, in Magadha, the scene of VARDHAMÁNA's birth and apotheosis, the oldest inscriptions found date no further back than the beginning of the sixteenth century².

From all credible testimony, therefore, it is impossible to avoid the inference that the Jains are a sect of comparatively recent institution, who first came into power and patronage about the eighth and ninth century: they probably existed before that date as a division of the Bauddhas, and owed their elevation to the suppression of that form of faith to which they contributed. This is positively asserted by the traditions of the south in several instances: the Bauddhas of Kanchi were confuted by AKALANKA, a Jain priest, and thereupon expelled the country *. VARA PANDYA, of Madurá, on becoming a Jain, is said to have persecuted the Bauddhas, subjecting them to personal tortures, and banishing them from the country. In Guzerat Buddha princes were succeeded by the Jains. There is every reason to be satisfied, therefore, that the total disappearance of the Bauddhas in India proper is connected with the influence of the Jains, which may have commenced in the sixth or seventh centuries, and continued till the twelfth.

The inveteracy prevalent between kindred schisms is a sufficient reason for any enmity felt by the Jains towards the Bauddhas, rather than towards the Brahmanical Hindus. There is, indeed, a political leaning to the latter, observable in their recognition of the Trans. R. A. S., I, 525. To these may be added the inscriptions at Párvanáth, and a number of inscriptions at Gwalior, copies of which were sent to Mr. FRASER, and which are all dated in the middle of the 15th century.

orthodox Pantheon, in the deference paid to the Vedas, and to the rites derivable from them, to the institution of castes, and to the employment of Brahmans as ministrant priests. They appear also to have adapted themselves to the prevailing form of Hinduism in different places: thus at Abú several Jain inscriptions commence with invocations of *Śiva*¹, and in the De-khan an edict promulgated by BUKKA RÁYA, of Vijayapagar, declares there is no real difference between the Jains and *Vaishnавas*². In some places the same temples are resorted to by Jains and Rámánujiya Vaishnавas, and, as observed by Mr. COLEBROOKE, a Jain on renouncing the heretical doctrines of his sect takes his place amongst the orthodox Hindus as a Kshatriya or Vaiśya, which would not be the case with a convert, who has not already caste as a Hindu³. In the South of India, indeed, the Jains preserve the distinction of castes: in Upper India they profess to be of one caste, or Vaiśyas. It is very clear, however, that admission to the Jain communion was originally independent of caste⁴, and the partial adoption of it or pretension to it, is either a spontaneous or politic conformity to the strong feeling on the subject which prevails amongst all Hindus.

¹ Major DELAMAINE notices that the mountain Girnár is equally sacred to Hindus as to Jains, and that an ancient temple of MAHĀ-DEVA is erected there.

⁴ MAHĀVIRĀ himself was the son of a king, and should therefore be a Kshatriya. His chief disciples, INDRABHŪTI, and the rest, were Brahmans. His especial attendant, GOŚĀLA, was an outcast, and his followers, of both sexes, were of every caste.

These are the great outlines of the rise and progress of the sect as derivable from sources entitled to credit; but the Jains have amongst themselves records of sectarial value detailing the succession of different teachers, and the origin of various heresies. Some extracts from one of these attached to a copy of the Kalpa Sūtra may be acceptable.

The succession of teachers is always deduced from MAHĀVĪRA, through his disciple SUDHARMĀ. Of the rest all but GAUTAMA died before their Master, as has been observed above, and GAUTAMA survived him but a month, which he spent in penance and fasting. SUDHARMĀ, therefore, was the only one who remained competent to impart instruction. His pupil was JAMBUSVĀMĪ, the last of the Kevalīs, or possessors of true wisdom: six teachers follow, termed Śrutekevalīs, or hearers of the first masters, and then seven others, Daśapūrvīs, from having been taught the works so named¹.

ŚRUTEKEVALĪS.	DAŚAPŪRVĪS.
Prabhava Svāmī.	Ārya Mahāgiri Sūri.
Śayyambhadra Sūri.	Ārya Suhasti Sūri.
Yaśobhadra Sūri.	Ārya Susthita Sūri.
Sambhūti Vijaya Sūri.	Indradinna Sūri.
Bhadrabāhu Sūri.	Dinna Sūri.
Sthūlabhadra Sūri.	Sinhagiri Sūri.
	Vajrasvāmī Sūri.

These are common to all the lists when correct. In the Belligola list they are omitted, and the successor of JAMBUSVÁMÍ is there named VERAŚÍNA, who may have been, as Mr. COLEBROOKE remarks, a hundred degrees removed. The lists, subsequently, vary according to the particular line of descent to which they belong.

Of these persons the second Śrutakevali is reputed to be the author of the Daśavaikaliká, one of the standard works of the sect. SŪHASTÍ, the second Daśapírví, was the preceptor of SAMPRATÍ RÁJÁ, and the third, SUSTHITA, founded the Kote gachcha, or tribe. VAJRASVÁMÍ, the last, established a particular division called the Vajra Śákhá.

Of the succeeding teachers, or Súris, the title borne by the spiritual preceptors of the Jains, CHANDRASÚRI, the second, is the founder of the family of that name, eight hundred and nine years, it is said, after the emancipation of MAHÁVÍRA. In his time, it is stated, the Digambaras arose; but we have seen that they were at least cotemporary with MAHÁVÍRA.

The 38th on the list, from MAHÁVÍRA inclusive, UDYOTANA SÚRI, first classed the Jains under eighty-nine Gachchas. The 40th JINEŚVARÍ who lived A. D. 1024, founded the Khartara family¹. With the 44th,

[A few variations occur in Hemachandra's Abhidh., sl. 33 and 34, and in the list of Sthaviras, translated by J. Stevenson. See the Kalpa Sútra and Navatatva, p. 100 f.]

¹ Major Tod gives a somewhat different account of the origin of this tribe. Khartra, he says, means true, an epithet of dis-

JINADATTA, originated the Ośwál family, and the Madhyakhartara branch; he was a teacher of great celebrity, and impressions of his feet in plaster or on stone are preserved in some temples, as at Bhelupur in Benares; he lived in 1148. Other divisions, either of a religious or civil nature, are attributed to various teachers, as the Chitrabala Gachcha to JINAPATI SÚRI, in A. D. 1149; the Anchalika doctrine to JINEŚVARA in 1160; the Lághu Khartara family to JINACHANDRA in 1265; another JINACHANDRA, the 61st in the list, was cotemporary with AKBAR. The list closes with the 70th Jina, HARSHA SÚRI, with whom, or his pupils, several works originated in the end of the seventeenth century¹.

Admitting this record to have been carefully preserved, we have seventy-one persons from MAHÁVÍRA, to whom a period of less than fourteen centuries can scarcely be assigned, and whose series would, therefore, have begun in the third century. It is not at all unlikely that such was the case, but no positive con-tinence which was bestowed by that great supporter of the Buddhists or Jains, SIDRÁJ, King of Anhalvára Páttan, on one of the branches (Gachch) in a grand religious disputation at the capital, in the eleventh century. The accounts are by no means incompatible, and my authority represents Jineśvarī victorious in a controversy.

¹ HEMACHANDRA, at the end of the Mahávíra Charitra, after stating that VAJRASVÁMÍ founded the VAJRASÁKHÁ, which was established in the Chandra Gachcha, gives the teachers of that family down to himself, YASOBHADRA, PRADYUMNA, VIŚVASENA, DEVACHANDRA, and HEMACHANDRA.

clusion can be drawn from a single document of this nature: a comparison with other lists is necessary, to determine the weight to be attached to it as an authority.

The Jains are divided into two principal divisions, Digambaras and Śvetāmbaras; the former of which appears to have the best pretensions to antiquity, and to have been most widely diffused¹. The discriminating difference is implied in these terms, the former meaning the Sky-clad, that is, naked, and the latter the white-robed, the teachers being so dressed. In the present day, however, the Digambara ascetics do not go naked, but wear coloured garments; they confine the disuse of clothes to the period of their meals, throwing aside their wrapper when they receive the food given them by their disciples: the points of difference between the two sects are far from restricted to that of dress, and comprehend a list of no fewer than seven hundred, of which eighty-four are regarded as of infinite importance: a few of these may be here noticed.

The Śvetāmbaras decorate the images of the Tirthankaras with earrings, necklaces, armlets, and tiaras of gold and jewels: the Digambaras leave their images without the foreign aid of ornament.

The Śvetáṁbaras assert that there are twelve heavens, and sixty-four Indras: the Digambaras maintain that there are sixteen heavens, and one hundred Olympian monarchs.

The Śvetáṁbaras permit their Gurus to eat out of vessels: the Digambaras receive the food in their open hands from their disciples.

The Śvetáṁbaras consider the accompaniments of the brush, waterpot, &c., as essential to the character of an ascetic: the Digambaras deny their importance.

The Śvetáṁbaras assert that the Angas, or scriptures, are the work of the immediate disciples of the Tīrthankaras: the Digambaras, with more reason, maintain that the leading authorities of the Jain religion are the composition of subsequent teachers or Āchāryas.

The advantage gained by the Digambaras in the last debateable matter, they lose, it is to be apprehended, in the next, when they assert that no woman can obtain Nirván, in opposition to the more gallant doctrine of their rivals, which admits the fair sex to the enjoyment of final annihilation.

These will be sufficient specimens of the causes of disagreement that divide the Jainas into two leading branches, whose mutual animosity is, as usual, of an intensity very disproportionate to the sources from whence it springs.

Besides these two great divisions, several minor sects are particularised as existing amongst the Jains. They appear, however, to be of no importance, as it has been found impossible to obtain any satisfactory account of the heresies they have adopted, or of their origin and present condition. Schism was contemporary even with MAHÁVÍRA, and his son-in-law, JAMÁLI, founded a dissentient order. His follower, GOŠÁLA, was also the institutor of a sect, and an impostor into the bargain, pretending to be the twenty-fourth Tirthankara. VAJRABANDA, the pupil of a very celebrated Digambara teacher, KUNDA KUÑD ÁCHÁRYA, founded the Drávida sect, according to some in the fifth, and to the others, in the seventh century. VAJRASVÁMÍ instituted the Mahániśitha sect, and JINENDRA SÚRI founded the Lampaka sect, by which images were discarded. The sects now most often heard of, although little known, are the Múla Sanghís, who use brushes of peacock's feathers, wear red garments, and receive alms in their hands: the Káshṭa Sanghís, who make their images of wood and employ brushes of the tail of the Yak: the Terah Panthís and Bis Panthís, or followers of thirteen and of twenty, said sometimes to refer to the number of objects which are most essential to salvation, and at others, explained by a legend of the foundation of the heresy by a number of persons, such as the denomination implies. Both these are said to deny the supremacy of a Guru, to dispense with the ministration of a Brahman, and to present no perfumes, flowers, nor fruits to the images of the *Tirthankaras*¹. The Bhishana Panthis carry their aversion to external emblems still farther, and discard the use of images altogether. The Dundiyas and Samvegis are religious orders: the former affect rigorous adherence to the moral code, but disregard all set forms of prayer or praise, and all modes of external worship: the Samvegis follow the usual practices, but subsist upon alms, accepting no more than is indispensable for present wants.

The whole of the Jains are again distinguished into clerical and lay, or into Yatis and Sravakas: the former lead a religious life, subsisting upon the alms supplied by the latter. According to the greater or less degree of sanctity to which they pretend are their seeming purity and outward precision, shewn especially in their care of animal life: they carry a brush to sweep the ground before they tread upon it; never eat nor drink in the dark, lest they should inadvertently swallow an insect, and sometimes wear a thin cloth over their mouths lest their breath should demolish some of the atomic ephemera that frolic in the sun-beams; they wear their hair cut short, strictly they should pluck it out by the roots; they profess continence and poverty, and pretend to observe frequent fasts and exercise profound abstraction. Some of them may be simple enthusiasts; many of them, however, are knaves, and the reputation which they enjoy all over India as skilful magicians is not very favourable to their general character: they are, in fact, not unfrequently Charlatans pretending to skill in palmistry and necromancy, dealing in empirical therapeutics, and dabbling in chemical, or rather alchemical manipulations. Some of them are less disreputably engaged in traffic, and they are often the proprietors of Maths and temples, and derive a very comfortable support from the offerings presented by the secular votaries of Jina. The Yatis, as above remarked, never officiate as priests in the temples, the ceremonies being conducted by a member of the orthodox priesthood, a Brahman, duly trained for the purpose. The Yatis are sometimes collected in Maths called by them Pośálas, and even when abroad in the world, they acknowledge a sort of obedience to the head of the Pośálā of which they were once members.

The secular members of the Jaina religion, or Śrāvakas, follow the usual practices of the other Hindus, but give alms only to the Yatis, and present offerings and pay homage only to the Tirthankaras; the present worship, indeed, is almost restricted to the two last of these personages, to PÁRŚVANÁTH, as commonly named Páriśnáth, the twenty-third; and to VARDDHAMÁNA or MAHÁVÍRA Svámí, the twenty-fourth Tirthankara of the present age. The temples of these divinities are, in general, much handsomer buildings than those of the orthodox Hindus: they consist of a square or oblong room, large enough to admit a tolerably numerous assemblage, surrounded by an open portico:

on one side is a sort of altar-piece of several stages; on the centre of the upper tier sits the chief deity of the temple supported by two other Arhats, whilst the rest, or a portion of them, are ranged upon the inferior tiers: the steeple is also distinguishable from that of other temples, being formed of departments, which are intended, apparently, to represent leaves, and surmounted by a pole resembling a flag-staff terminating in a gilt knob: there are several of these temples in the chief cities along the Ganges, and no fewer than a dozen in Murshidábád, to which the circumstance of the Śet family being of the Jaina persuasion attracted a number of fellow worshippers. In Calcutta there are four temples, two belonging to each sect. In Behár are the temples of PÁRÍSNÁTH and the Pádukas, or feet of VARDHAMÁNA, and VÁSUPÚJYA. Benares possesses several temples, one of which, in the suburb, called Belupura, is honoured as the birth-place of PÁRSVANÁTH. The shrine comprises two temples, one belonging to the Śvetámbaras, and one to the Digambaras. A temple of some size and celebrity occurs at Mainpuri, in the Doab, and most of the towns in that direction present Jain spires. The chief temples, however, are to the westward, and especially at Jaypur. The whole of Mewár and Márwár is strewed with remains of the sacred edifices of this sect.

The Jains of the South of India, as has been observed, are divided into castes: this is not the case in Upper Hindustan, where they are all of one caste, or, which is the same thing, of none. They are nevertheless equally tenacious of similar distinctions, and not only refuse to mix with other classes, but recognise a number of orders amongst themselves, between which no intermarriages can take place, and many of whom cannot eat together. This classification is the Gachcha or Got, the family or race, which has been substituted for the Varṇa, the Jāti, or caste. Of these Gachchas, or family divisions, they admit eighty-four¹,

1 The following are the appellations of the eighty-four Gachchas:

Khandewál.	Gahakhanduja.	Márkeya.
Porwál.	Chordiya.	Moíwál.
Agarwál.	Bhungeriwál.	Śvetwál. and these again appear to comprehend a variety of subdivisions: some of the Gachchas comprehend a portion of *Sri Vaishnava*s, between which sect and the Jains in Upper India a singular alliance seems sometimes to prevail.

The condition of Jaina worship may be inferred from the above notices of its temples. Its professors are to be found in every province of Hindustan, collected chiefly in towns, where, as merchants and bankers, they usually form a very opulent portion of the community. In Calcutta there are said to be five hundred families; but they are much more numerous at Murshidábád. In Behár they have been estimated at between three and four hundred families. They are in some numbers in Benares, but become more numerous ascending the Doáb. It is, however, to the westward that they abound: the provinces of Mewár and Márwári being apparently the cradle of the sect¹. They are also numerous in Guzerat, in the upper part of the Malabar coast, and are scattered throughout the Peninsula. They form, in fact, a very large and, from their wealth and influence, a most important division of the population of India.

Some of these are well known, but many of the others are never met with. The list was furnished by a respectable Yati—but how far it is throughout genuine, I cannot pretend to say. It omits several Gachchas of celebrity, particularly the Chandra and Khartara.

BÁBÁ LÁLÍS.

The followers of BÁBÁ LÁL are sometimes included amongst the Vaishnava sects, and the classification is warranted by the outward seeming of these sectaries, who streak the forehead with Gopichandana, and profess a veneration for RÁMA: in reality, however, they adore but one God, dispensing with all forms of worship, and directing their devotion by rules and objects derived from a medley of Vedánta and Ssúfi tenets.

BÁBÁ LÁL was a Kshatriya, born in Málvá, about the reign of JEHÁNGÍR: he early adopted a religious life under the tuition of CHETANA SVÁMÍ, whose fitness as a teacher had been miraculously proved. This person soliciting alms of BÁBÁ LÁL received some raw grain, and wood to dress it with: lighting the wood, he confined the fire between his feet, and supported the vessel in which he boiled the grain upon his insteps. BÁBÁ LÁL immediately prostrated himself before him as his Guru, and receiving from him a grain of the boiled rice to eat, the system of the universe became immediately unfolded to his comprehension. He followed CHETANA to Lahore, whence being dispatched to Dwáraká by his Guru, to procure some of the earth called Gopichandana, he effected his mission in less than an hour: this miraculous rapidity, the distance being some hundred miles, attesting his proficiency, he was dismissed by his Guru, in order to become a teacher. He settled at Dehanpur, near Sirhind, where he erected a Math, comprehending a handsome temple, and where he initiated a number of persons in the articles of his faith.

Amongst the individuals attracted by the doctrines of BÁBÁ LÁL, was the liberal-minded and unfortunate DÁRÁ SHUKOH: he summoned the sage to his presence to be instructed in his tenets, and the result of seven interviews was committed to writing, in the form of a dialogue between the Prince and the Pír, by two literary Hindus attached to the Prince's train, one YADU DÁS, a Kshatriya, and the other RAICHAND Brahman, the latter the Mírmánshí; the interview took place in the garden of JAFFAR KHÁN SÁDUH, in the 21st year of SHÁH JEHÁN's reign, or 1649: the work is entitled Nádir un nikát, and is written, as the name implies, in the Persian language. Some miscellaneous extracts from it may not be unacceptable, as they may not only explain the tenets of BÁBÁ LÁL, and something of the Vedánta and Ssúfi doctrines, but may illustrate better than any description the notions generally prevailing of the duties of a religious and mendicant life. The interrogator is the Prince, BÁBÁ LÁL himself the respondent.

What is the passion of a Fakír?—Knowledge of God.

What is the power of an Ascetic?—Impotence.

What is Wisdom?—Devotion of the heart to the Heart's Lord.

How are the hands of a Fakír employed?—To cover his ears.

Where are his feet?—Hidden, but not hampered by his garments.

What best becomes him?— Vigilance night and day.

In what should he be unapt?— Immoderate dict.

What is his dwelling?—God's creatures.

His Kingdom?— God.

What are the lights of his mansion?—The Sun and Moon.

What is his couch?— The Earth.

What is his indispensable observance?—Praise and glorification of the Cherisher of all things, and the needer of none.

What is suitable for a Fakír?— Lá, none; as Lá Allah, &c. there is no God but God.

What are the duties of a Fakír?— Poverty and faith.

Which is the best religion?— Verse, “The Creed of the lover differs from other Creeds. God is the faith and creed of those who love him, but to do good is best for the follower of every faith.” Again, as HÁFIZ says:

The object of all religions is alike,

All men seek their beloved,—

What is the difference between prudent and wild?

All the world is love's dwelling,

Why talk of a Mosque or a Church?

With whom should the Fakír cultivate intimacy?—With the Lord of loveliness.

To whom should he be a stranger?—To covetousness, anger, envy, falsehood, and malice.

Should he wear garments or go naked?—The loins should be covered by those who are in their senses; nudity is excusable in those who are insane. The love of God does not depend upon a cap or a coat.

How should a Fakír conduct himself?—He should perform what he promises, and not promise what he cannot perform.

Should evil be done to evil doers?—The Fakír is to do evil to none, he is to consider good and ill alike, so HÁFIZ says:

"The repose of the two worlds depends upon two rules, kindness to friends and gentleness to foes."

What is the nature of the Takia (the pillow or abbacy?)—To commence with a seat upon it is improper, and at all times an erratic life is preferable; when the body is weakened by age or sickness, the Fakir may then repose upon his pillow: so situated, he should welcome every Fakir as his guest, and consider nothing but God to be his own.

Is it necessary for a Fakir to withdraw from the world?—It is prudent, but not necessary: the man in society who fixes his heart on God is a Fakir, and the Fakir who takes an interest in the concerns of men is a man of the world, so MAULÁNÁ RÚMÍ observes: "What is the world? forgetfulness of God, not clothes, nor wealth, nor wife, nor offspring."

What is the difference between nature and created things?—Some compare them to the seed and the tree. The seed and the tree are equivalent though related; although the same in substance, they are not necessarily co-existent nor co-relative. They may be also compared to the waves and the sea; the first cannot be without the second, but the sea may be without waves, wind is necessary to their product: so, although nature and created things are of one essence, yet the evolution of the latter from the former requires the interference of an evolving cause, or the interposition of a Creator.

Are the soul, life, and body merely shadows?—The soul is of the same nature as God, and one of the many properties of universal life, like the sea, and a drop of water; when the latter joins the former, it also is sea.

How do the Paramátmá (supreme soul) and Jívátmá (living soul) differ?—They do not differ, and pleasure and pain ascribable to the latter arises from its imprisonment in the body: the water of the Ganges is the same whether it run in the river's bed or be shut up in a decanter.

What difference should that occasion?—Great: a drop of wine added to the water in the decanter will impart its flavor to the whole, but it would be lost in the river. The Paramátmá, therefore, is beyond accident, but the Jívátmá is afflicted by sense and passion. Water cast loosely on a fire will extinguish the fire; put that water over the fire in a boiler, and the fire will evaporise the water, so the body being the confining caldron, and passion the fire, the soul, which is compared to the water, is dispersed abroad;—the one great supreme soul is incapable of these properties, and happiness is therefore only obtained in reunion with it, when the dispersed and individualized portions combine again with it, as the drops of water with the parent stream; hence, although God needs not the service of his slave, yet the slave should remember that he is separated from God by the body alone, and may exclaim perpetually: Blessed be the moment when I shall lift the veil from off that face. The veil of the face of my beloved is the dust of my body.

What are the feelings of the perfect Fakir?—They have not been, they are not to be, described, as it is said: a person asked me what are the sensations of a lover? I replied, when you are a lover, you will know.

PRÁN NÁTHÍS.

These are also called Dhámís: they owe their origin to PRÁN NÁTH, a Kshatriya, who being versed in Mohammedian learning, as well as in his own, attempted to reconcile the two religions: with this view he composed a work called the Mahitáriyal, in which texts from the Korán, and the Vedas are brought together, and shewn not to be essentially different. PRÁN NÁTH flourished about the latter part of AURANGZEB's reign, and is said to have acquired great influence with CHATTRASÁL, Rájá of Bündelkhanád, by effecting the discovery of a diamond mine. Bündelkhanád is the chief seat of his followers, and in Punna is a building consecrated to the use of the sect, in one apartment of which, on a table covered with gold cloth, lies the volume of the founder.

As a test of the disciple's consent to the real identity of the essence of the Hindu and Mohammedan creeds, the ceremony of initiation consists of eating in the society of members of both communions: with this exception, and the admission of the general principle, it does not appear that the two classes confound their civil or even religious distinctions: they continue to observe the practices and ritual of their forefathers, whether Musalman or Hindu, and the union, beyond that of community of eating, is no more than any rational individual of either sect is fully prepared for, or the admission, that the God of both, and of all religions, is one and the same.

SÁDHIS.

A full account of this sect of Hindu Unitarians, by the Reverend Mr. FISHER, was published in the Missionary Intelligencer some years ago, and some further notice of them is inserted in the *Transactions of the Royal Asiatic Society*¹, by Mr. TRANT. They are distinguished from other Hindus by professing the adoration of one Creator, and by personal and moral observances which entitle them, in their own estimation, to the appellation of Sádhis, Sádhus, Pure or Puritans.

The Sádhis are found chiefly in the upper part of the Doáb, from Farúkhábád to beyond Dehli. In the former they occupy a suburb called Sádhwára, and are more numerous there than in any other town; their numbers are estimated at two thousand. There are said to be some at Mirzapore, and a few more to the South; their numbers, however, are limited, and they are chiefly from the lower classes.

The sect originated in the year of VIKRAMÁDITYA 1714 (A. D. 1658), according to Mr. TRANT, with a person named BÍRBHÁN, who received a miraculous communication from one UDAYA DÁS, and in consequence taught the Sádh doctrines. Mr. FISHER calls BÍRBHÁN the disciple of JOGÍ DÁS, who commanding a body of troops in the service of the Rájá of Dholpur was left as slain on the field of battle, but restored to life by a stranger in the guise of a mendicant, who carried him to a mountain, taught him the tenets of the faith, and having bestowed upon him the power of working miracles sent him to disseminate his doctrines. These circumstances are rather obscurely alluded to in the original authorities consulted on the present occasion, but they agree with the above in considering BÍRBHÁN an inhabitant of Brijhasír, near Nárnaul, in the province of Dehli, as the founder of the sect, at the date above mentioned. BÍRBHÁN received his knowledge from the SAT GURU, the pure teacher, also called Úda ká Dás, the servant of the one God, and particularly described as the Málek ká Hukm, the order of the Creator, the personified word of God.

The doctrines taught by the super-human instructor of BÍRBHÁN were communicated in Sabdas and Sákhis, detached Hindí stanzas like those of KABÍR. They are collected into manuals, and read at the religious meetings of the Sádhs: their substance is collected into a tract entitled Ádi Upadeś, first precepts, in which the whole code is arranged under the following twelve Hukms, or Commandments.

1. Acknowledge but one God who made and can destroy you, to whom there is none superior, and to whom alone therefore is worship due, not to earth, nor stone, nor metal, nor wood, nor trees, nor any created thing. There is but one Lord, and the word of the Lord. He who meditates on falsehoods, practices falsehood, and commits sin, and he who commits sin falls into Hell.

2. Be modest and humble, set not your affections on the world, adhere faithfully to your creed, and avoid intercourse with all not of the same faith, eat not of a stranger's bread.

3. Never lie nor speak ill at any time to, or of any thing, of earth or water, of trees or animals. Let the tongue be employed in the praise of God. Never steal, nor wealth, nor land, nor beasts, nor pasture: distinguish your own from another's property, and be content with what you possess. Never imagine evil. Let not your eyes rest on improper objects, nor men, nor women, nor dances, nor shows.

4. Listen not to evil discourse, nor to any thing but the praises of the Creator, nor to tales, nor gossip, nor calumny, nor music, nor singing, except hymns; but then the only musical accompaniment must be in the mind.

5. Never covet any thing, either of body or wealth: take not of another. God is the giver of all things, as your trust is in him so shall you receive.

6. When asked what you are, declare yourself a Sádh, speak not of caste, engage not in controversy, hold firm your faith, put not your hope in men.

7. Wear white garments, use no pigments, nor collyrium, nor dentifrice, nor Menhdi, nor mark your person, nor your forehead with sectarian distinctions, nor wear chaplets, or rosaries, or jewels.

8. Never eat nor drink intoxicating substances, nor chew pán, nor smell perfumes, nor smoke tobacco, nor chew nor smell opium, hold not up your hands, bow not down your head in the presence of idols or of men.

9. Take no life away, nor offer personal violence, nor give dammatory evidence, nor seize any thing by force.

10. Let a man wed one wife, and a woman one husband, let not a man eat of a woman's leavings, but a woman may of a man's, as may be the custom. Let the woman be obedient to the man.

11. Assume not the garb of a mendicant, nor solicit alms, nor accept gifts. Have no dread of necromancy, neither have recourse to it. Know before you confide. The meetings of the Pious are the only places of pilgrimage, but understand who are the Pious before you so salute them.

12. Let not a Sádh be superstitious as to days, or to lunations, or to months, or the cries or appearances of birds or animals; let him seek only the will of the Lord.

These injunctions are repeated in a variety of forms, but the purport is the same, and they comprise the essence of the Sádh doctrine which is evidently derived from the unitarianism of KABÍR, NÁNAK, and similar writers, with a slight graft from the principles of Christianity. In their notions of the constitution of the universe, in the real, although temporary existence of inferior deities and their incarnations, and in the ultimate object of all devotion, liberation from life on earth, or Mukti, the Sádhs do not differ from other Hindus.

The Sádhs have no temples, but assemble at stated periods in houses, or courts adjoining set apart for this purpose. According to Mr. FISHER, their meetings are held every full moon, when men and women collect at an early hour, all bringing such food as they are able, the day is spent in miscellaneous conversation, or in the discussion of matters of common interest. In the evening they eat and drink together, and the night is passed in the recitation of the stanzas attributed to BÍRBHÁN, or his preceptor, and the poems of DÁDÚ, NÁNAK, or KABÍR.

From the term they apply to the deity, SATNÁM, the true name, the Sádhs are also called Satnámis; but this appellation more especially indicates a different, although kindred, sect.

SATNÁMÍS.

These profess to adore the true name alone, the one God, the cause and creator of all things, Nirguń, or void of sensible qualities, without beginning or end.

They borrow, however, their notions of creation from the Vedánta philosophy, or rather from the modified form in which it is adapted to vulgar apprehension. Worldly existence is illusion, or the work of MÁYÁ, the primitive character of BHAVÁNÍ, the wife of SÍVA. They recognise accordingly the whole Hindu Pantheon—and, although they profess to worship but one God, pay reverence to what they consider manifestations of his nature visible in the Avatárs, particularly RÁMA and KRISHNA.

Unlike the Sádhs also, they use distinctive marks, and wear a double string of silk bound round the right wrist. Frontal lines are not invariably employed, but some make a perpendicular streak with ashes of a burnt offering made to HANUMÁN.

Their moral code is something like that of all Hindu quietists, and enjoins indifference to the world, its pleasures or its pains, implicit devotion to the spiritual guide, clemency and gentleness, rigid adherence to truth, the discharge of all ordinary, social, or religious obligations, and the hope of final absorption into the one spirit which pervades all things.

There is little or no difference therefore in essentials between the Satnámis and some of the Vaishnava unitarians, but they regard themselves as a separate body, and have their own founder JAGJÍVAN DÁS. He was a Kshatriya by birth, and continued in the state of Grihastha, or house-holder, through life: he was a native of Oude, and his Samádh, or shrine, is shewn at Katwa, a place between Lucknow and Ajúdhyá. He wrote several tracts, as the Jnán Prakás, Mahá-pralaya, and Prathama Grantha: they are in Hindi couplets; the first is dated in Samvat 1817, or A. D. 1761, the last is in the form of a dialogue between Síva and Párvatí. The following is from the Mahá-pralaya.

“The pure man lives amidst all, but away from all: his affections are engaged by nothing: what he may know he knows, but he makes no enquiry: he neither goes nor comes, neither learns nor teaches, neither cries nor sighs, but discusses himself with himself. There is neither pleasure nor pain, neither clemency nor wrath, neither fool nor sage to him. JAGJIVANDÁS asks, does any one know a man so exempt from infirmity who lives apart from mankind and indulges not in idle speech?"

ŚIVA NÁRÁYAÑÍS.

This is another sect professing the worship of one God, of whom no attributes are predicated. Their unitarianism is more unqualified than that of either of the preceding, as they offer no worship, pay no regard whatever to any of the objects of Hindu or Mohammedan veneration. They also differ from all in admitting proselytes alike from Hindus or Mohammedans, and the sect comprises even professed Christians from the lower classes of the mixed population.

Admission into the sect is not a matter of much ceremony, and a Guru, or spiritual guide, is not requisite; a few *Śiva Náráyañí*s assemble at the requisition of a novice, place one of their text books in the midst of them, on which betel and sweetmeats have previously been arranged. After a while these are distributed amongst the party, a few passages are read from the book, and the sect has acquired a new member.

Truth, temperance, and mercy are the cardinal virtues of this sect, as well as of the Sádhs; polygamy is prohibited, and sectarian marks are not used: conformity to the external observances of the Hindus or Mohammedans, independently of religious rites, is recommended, but latitude of practice is not unfrequent; and the Śiva Náráyańis, of the lower orders, are occasionally addicted to strong potations.

The sect derives its appellation from that of its founder ŚIVANÁRÁYÁN, a Rájput, of the Nerivána tribe, a native of Chandávan, a village near Gházípur: he flourished in the reign of MOHAMMED SHÁH, and one of his works is dated Samvat, 1791, or A. D. 1735. He was a voluminous writer in the inculcation of his doctrines, and eleven books, in Hindi verse, are ascribed to him. They are entitled: Lao or Lava Granth, Śántvilás, Vajan Granth, Śántsundara, Guru-nyás, Śántáchárti, Śántopadeśa, Śabdávali, Śántpar-vána, Śántmahimá, Śántságára.

There is also a twelfth, the Seal of the whole, but it has not yet been divulged, remaining in the exclusive charge of the head of the sect. This person resides at Balsande, in the Gházípur district, where there is a college and establishment.

The Śivanáráyańis are mostly Rájputs, and many are Sipáhis: many of the Up-country Bearers also belong to the sect. The members are said to be numerous about Gházípur, and some are to be met with in Calcutta.

ŚÚNYAVÁDÍS.

The last sect which it has been propose to noticed is one of which the doctrines are atheistical. There is no novelty in this creed, as it was that of the Chár-vákas and Nástikas, and is, to a great extent, that of the Bauddhas and Jains; but an attempt has been recently made to give it a more comprehensive and universal character, and to bring it within the reach of popular attraction.

A distinguished Patron of the Śínyavádis was DÁ-YARÁM, the Rájá of Hatras, when that fortress was destroyed by the Marquis of HASTINGS. Under his encouragement a work in Hindí verse was composed by BAKHTÁVAR, a religious mendicant, entitled the Śúnisár, the essence of emptiness, the purport of which is to shew that all notions of man and God are fallacies, and that nothing is. A few passages from this book will convey an idea of the tenets of the sect.

“Whatever I behold is Vacuity. Theism and Atheism—MÁYÁ and BRAHM—all is false, all is error; the globe itself, and the egg of BRAHMÁ, the seven Dwípas and nine Khańdas, heaven and earth, the sun and moon, BRAHMÁ, VISHNU and ŚIVA, KÚRMA and ŚESHA, the Guru and his pupil, the individual and the species, the temple and the god, the observance of ceremonial rites, and the muttering of prayers, all is emptiness. Speech, hearing and discussion are emptiness, and substance itself is no more.”

“Let every one meditate upon himself, nor make known his self-communion to another; let him be the worshipper and the worship, nor talk of a difference between this and that; look into yourself and not into another, for in yourself that other will be found. There is no other but myself, and I talk of another from ignorance. In the same way as I see my face in a glass I see myself in others; but it is error to think that what I see is not my face, but that of another—whatever you see is but yourself, and father and mother are non-entities; you are the infant and the old man, the wise man and the fool, the male and the female: it is you who are drowned in the stream, you who pass over, you are the killer, and the slain, the slayer and the eater, you are the king and the subject. You seize yourself and let go, you sleep, and you wake, you dance for yourself and sing for yourself. You are the sensualist and the ascetic, the sick man and the strong. In short, whatever you see, that is you, as bubbles, surf, and billows are all but water."

"When we are visited in sleep by visions, we think in our sleep that those visions are realities—we wake, and find them falsehoods, and they leave not a wreck behind. One man in his sleep receives some information, and he goes and tells it to his neighbour: from such idle narrations what benefit is obtained? what will be left to us when we have been winnowing chaff?"

"I meditate upon the Suni Doctrine alone, and know neither virtue nor vice—many have been the princes of the earth, and nothing did they bring and nothing took they away; the good name of the liberal surviyed him, and disrepute covered the niggard with its shadow. So let men speak good words, that none may speak ill of them afterwards. Take during the few days of your life what the world offers you. Enjoy your own share, and give some of it to others: without liberality, who shall acquire reputation? Give ever after your means, such is the established rule. To some give money, to some respect, to some kind words, and to some delight. Do good to all the world, that all the world may speak good of you. Praise the name of the liberal when you rise in the morning, and throw dust upon the name of the niggard. Evil and good are attributes of the body; you have the choice of two sweetmeats in your hands. KARNA was a giver of gold, and JANAKA as liberal as wise. SIVI, HARISCHANDRA, DADHICHA, and many others, have acquired by their bounty fame throughout the world."

"Many now are, many have been, and many will be—the world is never empty; like leaves upon the trees, new ones blossom as the old decay. Fix not your heart upon a withered leaf, but seek the shade of the green foliage: a horse of a thousand rupees is good for nothing when dead, but a living tattoo will carry you along the road. Have no hope in the man that is dead, trust but in him that is living. He that is dead will be alive no more: a truth that all men do not know; of all those that have died, has any business brought any one back again, or has any one brought back tidings of the rest? A rent garment cannot be spun anew, a broken pot cannot be pieced again. A living man has nothing to do with heaven and hell, but when the body has become dust, what is the difference between a Jackass and a dead Saint?"

"Earth, water, fire, and wind blended together constitute the body—of these four elements the world is composed, and there is nothing else. This is BRAHMA,

"Hindus and Musalmans are of the same nature, two leaves of one tree—these call their teachers Mullás, those term them Pañdits; two pitchers of one clay: one performs Namáz, the other offers Pújá: where is the difference? I know of no dissimilarity—they are both followers of the doctrine of Duality—they have the same bone, the same flesh, the same blood, and the same marrow. One cuts off the foreskin, the other puts on a sacrificial thread. Ask of them the difference, enquire the importance of these distinctions, and they will quarrel with you: dispute not, but know them to be the same; avoid all idle wrangling and strife, and adhere to the truth, the doctrine of DÁYARÁM."

"I fear not to declare the truth; I know no difference between a subject and a king; I want neither homage nor respect, and hold no communion with any but the good: what I can obtain with facility that will I desire, but a palace or a thicket are to me the same—the error of mine and thine have I cast away, and know nothing of loss or gain. When a man can meet with a preceptor to teach him these truths, he will destroy the errors of a million of births. Such a teacher is now in the world, and such a one is DÁYARÁM."

The survey that has thus been taken of the actual state of the Hindu religion will shew, that its internal constitution has not been exempt from those varieties, to which all human systems of belief are subject, and that it has undergone great and frequent modifications, until it presents an appearance which, there is great reason to suppose, is very different from that which it originally wore.

The precise character of the primitive Hindu system will only be justly appreciated, when a considerable portion of the ritual of the Vedas shall have been translated, but some notion of their contents and purport may be formed from Mr. COLEBROOKE's account of them¹, as well as from his description of the religious ceremonies of the Hindus². It is also probable that the Institutes of MANU, in a great measure, harmonise with the Vaidik Code.

From these sources then it would seem, that some of the original rites are still preserved in the Homa, or fire offerings, and in such of the Sanskáras, or purificatory ceremonies, as are observed at the periods of birth, tonsure, investiture, marriage and cremation. Even in these ceremonies, however, formulæ borrowed from the Tantras assume the place of the genuine texts, whilst on many occasions the observances of the Vedas are wholly neglected. Nor is this inconsistent with the original system, which was devised for certain recognised classes into which the Hindu community was then divided, and of which three out of four parts no longer exist—the Hindus being now distinguished into Brahmans and mixed castes alone—and the former having almost universally deviated from the duties and habits to which they were originally devoted. Neither of these classes, therefore, can with propriety make use of the Vaidik ritual, and their manual of devotion must be taken from some other source.

How far the preference of any individual Divinity as an especial object of veneration is authorised by the Vedas, remains yet to be determined; but there is no reason to doubt that most of the forms to which homage is now paid are of modern canonization. At any rate such is the highest antiquity of the most celebrated Teachers and Founders of the popular sects; and BASAVA in the Dekhan, VALLABHA SVÁMÍ in Hindustan, and CHAITANYA in Bengal, claim no earlier a date than the eleventh and sixteenth centuries.

Consistent with the introduction of new objects of devotion is the elevation of new races of individuals to the respect or reverence of the populace as their ministers and representatives. The Brahmans retain, it is true, a traditional sanctity; and when they cultivate pursuits suited to their character, as the Law and Literature of their sacred language, they receive occasional marks of attention, and periodical donations from the most opulent of their countrymen. But a very mistaken notion prevails generally amongst Europeans of the position of the Brahmans in Hindu society, founded on the terms in which they are spoken of by MANU, and the application of the expression 'Priesthood' to the Brahmanical Order by Sir WILLIAM JONES. In the strict sense of the phrase it never was applicable to the Brahmins; for although some amongst them acted in ancient times as family priests, and conducted the fixed or occasional ceremonials of household worship, yet even MANU* holds the Brahman, who ministers to an idol, infamous during life, and condemned to the infernal regions after death, and the Sanskrit language abounds with synonyms for the priest of a temple, significant of his degraded condition both in this world and the next. Ministrant Priests in temples, therefore, the Brahmins, collectively speaking, never were—and although many amongst them act in that capacity, it is no more their appropriate province than any other lucrative occupation. In the present day, however, they have ceased to be in a great measure the ghostly advisers of the people, either individually or in their households. This office is now filled by various persons, who pretend to superior sanctity, as Gosáins, Vairágis, and Sannyásis. Many of these are Brahmins, but they are not necessarily so, and it is not as Brahmins that they receive the veneration of their lay followers. They derive it, as we have seen, from individual repute, or more frequently from their descent from the founder of some particular division, as is the case with the

* [III, 152. See also Lassen, Ind. Alt., I, 794.]

Gokulastha Gosáins and the Gosvámis of Bengal. The Brahmans as a caste exercise little real influence on the minds of the Hindus beyond what they obtain from their numbers, affluence and rank. As a hierarchy they are null, and as a literary body they are few, and meet with but slender countenance from their countrymen or their foreign rulers. That they are still of great importance in the social system of British India, is unquestionable, but it is not as a priesthood. They bear a very large proportion to all the other tribes; they are of more respectable birth, and in general of better education; a prescriptive reverence for the order improves these advantages, and Brahmans are accordingly numerous amongst the most affluent and distinguished members of every Hindu state. It is only, however, as far as they are identified with the Gurus of the popular sects, that they can be said to hold any other than secular consideration.

Aware apparently of the inequality upon which those Gurus contended with the long established claims of the Brahmanical tribe, the new teachers of the people took care to invest themselves with still higher pretensions. The Áchárya or Guru of the three first classes is no doubt described by MANU* as entitled to the most profound respect from his pupil during pupilage, but the Guru of the present day exacts implicit devotion from his disciples during life. It is unnecessary here to repeat what there has been previous occasion to notice with respect to the extravagant obedience to be paid by some sectarians to the Gurū, whose favour is declared to be of much more importance than that of the god whom he represents.

Another peculiarity in the modern systems which has been adverted to in the preceding pages is the paramount value of Bhakti—faith—implicit reliance on the favour of the Deity worshipped. This is a substitute for all religious or moral acts, and an expiation for every crime. Now, in the Vedas, two branches are distinctly marked, the practical and speculative. The former consists of prayers and rules for oblations to any or all of the gods—but especially to INDRA and AGNI, the rulers of the firmament and of fire, for positive worldly goods, health, posterity and affluence. The latter is the investigation of matter and spirit, leading to detachment from worldly feelings and interests, and final liberation from bodily existence. The first is intended for the bulk of mankind, the second for philosophers and ascetics. There is not a word of faith, of implicit belief or passionate devotion in all this, and they seem to have been as little essential to the primitive Hindu worship as they were to the religious systems of Greece and Rome. Bhakti is an invention, and apparently a modern one*, of the Institutors of the existing sects, intended, like that of the mystical holiness of the Guru, to extend their own authority. It has no doubt exercised a most mischievous influence upon the moral principles of the Hindus.

Notwithstanding the provisions with which the sectarian Gurus fortified themselves, it is clear that they were never able to enlist the whole of Hinduism under their banners, or to suppress all doubt and disbelief. It has been shewn in the introductory pages of this essay, that great latitude of speculation has always been allowed amongst the Brahmans themselves, and it will have been seen from the notices of different sects, that scepticism is not unfrequent amongst the less privileged orders. The tendency of many widely diffused divisions is decidedly monotheistical, and we have seen that both in ancient and modern times attempts have been made to inculcate the doctrines of utter unbelief. It is not likely that these will ever extensively spread, but there can be little doubt that with the diffusion of education independent enquiry into the merits of the prevailing systems and their professors will become more universal, and be better directed. The germ is native to the soil: it has been kept alive for ages under the most unfavourable circumstances, and has been apparently more vigorous than ever during the last century. It only now requires prudent and patient fostering to grow into a stately tree, and yield goodly fruit.

TRÜBNER & CO.'S LIST OF NEW PUBLICATIONS.

ENGLISH PHILOLOGY.

A DICTIONARY OF ENGLISH ETYMOLOGY. By HENSLIGH WEDGWOOD, M. A., late Fellow of Christ's College, Cambridge. In 3 volumes. Vol. I., embracing letters A to D. 8vo. pp. xxiv, 508. cloth. 14s

"Dictionary are a class of books not usually esteemed light reading; but no intelligent man were to be pitied who should find himself shut up on a rainy day, in a lonely house, in the dreariest part of Salisbury Plain, with no other means of recreation than that which Mr. Wedgwood's Dictionary of English Etymology could afford him. He would read it through from cover to cover at a sitting, and only regret that he had not the second volume to begin upon forthwith. It is a very able book, of great research, full of delightful surprises, a repertory of the fairy tales of linguistic science."—Spectator.

ON THE STUDY OF MODERN LANGUAGES in general, and of the English Language in particular. An Essay. By DAVID ASHER, PH.D. 12mo. cloth, pp. viii, 80. 2s

"I have read Dr. Asher's Essay on the Study of the Modern Languages with profit and pleasure, and think it might be usefully reprinted here. It would open to many English students of their own language some interesting points from which to regard it, and suggest to them works bearing upon it which otherwise they might not have heard of. Any weakness which it has in respect of the absolute or relative value of English authors does not materially affect its value.—RICHARD C. TREMONT.—Westminster, June 25, 1859."

Vol. II. Part 4 (Continuation).—Polynesia and Borneo, 8vo. pp. 77 to 154. 3s. 6d.

The above is, without exception, the most important addition yet made to African Philology. The amount of materials brought together by Sir George, with a view to elucidate the subject, is stupendous; and the labour bestowed on them, and the results arrived at, incontestably establish the claim of the Author to be called the father of African and Polynesian Philology.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"We congratulate the Governor of the Cape on the production of a most important aid to the study of the twin sciences of philology and ethnology, and look forward to the completion of the Catalogue of itself as a great and permanent step towards civilization of the barbarous races whose formation, habits, language, religion, and food, are all, more or less, most carefully noted in its pages."—Leader.

"It is for these substantial reasons that we deemed it worth a brief notice to call attention to these excellently arranged Catalogues (with important notes), describing the various works in the library of Sir George Grey, and by which this great philanthropist will greatly aid in civilizing the numerous peoples within the limit of the colony of the Cape of Good Hope."—Brighton Gazette.

EVANGELIARIUM, EPISTOLARIUM ET LECTONARIUM AZTECUM, sive Mexicanum, ex Antiquo Codice Mexicano, nuper reperto, depromptum cum praefatione interpretatione adnotationibus Glossario edidit BERNARDINUS BIONDELLI. Folio. pp. 1, 574. 1858. (Only 400 copies printed. on stout writingpaper. Bound half Morocco, gilt top, uncut edges) price 6/-

The very interesting Codex of which the above is a careful reprint, was discovered in Mexico by Beltrami in the year 1826, and came into the hands of the present editor by purchase from the heirs. It is composed in the purest and most elegant Nahuatl, that was ever written, by Bernardino Sahagun, a Spanish monk of the Franciscan order, with the assistance of two Scions of royalty in Anahuac, one the son of Montezuma, the other the son of the Prince of Tezcuco-- and purports to be a "postilla" (post illa, scilicet textus verba) on the Gospels and Epistles. Sahagun arrived at Mexico in the year 1529, and lived and laboured with great success in that country for fully sixty years. Of his many works in and on the Nahuatl language the above is the only one which has been saved from perdition. Mr. Biondelli has accompanied Sahagun's text by a Latin version, has added a copious Vocabulary, Nahuatl and Latin, and, by his introductory observations, has thrown considerable light not alone upon the Nahuatl language, its affinity to other families of languages, its grammatical peculiarities, but also upon the traditions, institutions, and monuments of the Aztecs--thus forming a complete treasury of everything appertaining to the ancient Aztecs. Altogether this work is probably one of the most important contributions ever made to American philology, and cannot henceforth be dispensed with by the student of this branch of linguistics.

THE LITERATURE OF AMERICAN ABORIGINAL LANGUAGES. By HERMANN E. LUDEWIG. With Additions and Corrections by Professor WM. W. TURNER. Edited by NICOLAS TRÜBNER. 8vo.; fly and general Title, 2 leaves; Dr. Ludewig's Preface, pp. v—viii; Editors' Preface. pp. ix—xii; Biographical Memoir of Dr. Ludewig, pp. xiii, xiv; and Introductory Bibliographical Notices, pp. xiv—xxiv, followed by List of

Contents. Then follow Dr. Ludewig's Bibliotheca Glottica, alphabetically arranged, with additions by the Editor, pp. 1—209; Professor Turner's additions, with those of the Editor to the same, also alphabetically arranged, pp. 210—246; Index, pp 247—256; and list of Errata, pp. 257, 258. One volume, handsomely bound in cloth, price 10s 6d

This work is intended to supply a great want, now that the study of Ethnology has proved that exotic languages are not mere curiosities, but essential and interesting parts of the natural history of man, forming one of the most curious links in the great chain of national affinities, defining as they do the reciprocity existing between man and the soil he lives upon. No one can venture to write the history of America without a knowledge of her aboriginal languages; and unimportant as such researches may seem to men engaged in the mere bustling occupations of life, they will at least acknowledge that these records of the past, like the stern-lights of a departing ship, are the last glimmers of savage life, as it becomes absorbed or recedes before the tide of civilization. Dr. Ludewig and Professor Turner have made most diligent use of the public and private collections in America, access to all of which was most liberally granted to them. This has placed at their disposal the labours of the American Missionaries, so little known on this side of the Atlantic that they may be looked upon almost in the light of untrodden ground. But English and Continental libraries have also been ransacked; and Dr. Ludewig kept up a constant and active correspondence with scholars of "the Fatherland", as well as with men of similar tastes and pursuits in France, Spain, and Holland, determined to leave no stone unturned to render his labours as complete as possible. The volume, perfect in itself, is the first of an enlarged edition of Vater's "Linguarum totius orbis Index". The work has been noticed by the press of both Continents, and we may be permitted to refer particularly to the following:

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"This work, mainly the production of the late Herr Ludewig, a German naturalized in America, is devoted to an account of the literature of the aboriginal languages of that country. It gives an alphabetical list of the various tribes of whose languages any record remains, and refers to the works, papers, or manuscripts, in which such information may be found. The work has evidently been a labour of love; and as no pains seems to have been spared by the editors, Prof. Turner and Mr. Trübner, in rendering the work as accurate and complete as possible, those who are most interested in its contents will be best able to judge of the labour and assiduity bestowed upon it by author, editors, and publisher."—Athenaeum, 5th April, 1858.

"This is the first instalment of a work which will be of the greatest value to philologists; and is a compendium of the aboriginal languages of the American continents, and a digest of all the known literature bearing upon those languages. Mr. Trübner's hand has been engaged passim, and in his preface he lays claim to about one-sixth of the whole; and we have no doubt that the encouragement with which this portion of the work will be received by scholars, will be such as to inspire Mr. Trübner with sufficient confidence to persevere in his arduous and most honourable task."—The Critic, 15th Dec. 1857.

"Few would believe that a good octavo volume would be necessary to exhaust the subject; yet so it is, and this handsome, useful, and curious volume, carefully compiled by Mr. Ludewig, assisted by Professor Turner, and edited by the careful hand of Mr. Trübner, the well-known publisher, will be sure to find a place in many libraries."—Bent's Advertiser, 6th Nov. 1857.

"The lovers of American linguistics will find in the work of Mr. Trübner scarcely any point omitted calculated to aid the comparative philologer in tracing the various languages of the great Western Continent."—Galway Mercury, 30th Jan. 1858.

"Only those deeply versed in philological studies can appreciate this book at its full value. It shows that there are upwards of seven hundred and fifty aboriginal American languages."—Gentleman's Magazine, Feb. 1858.

"The work contains an account of no fewer than seven hundred different aboriginal dialects of America, with an introductory chapter of bibliographical information; and under each dialect is an account of any grammars or other works illustrative of it."—The Bookseller, Jan. 1858.

"We have here the list of monuments still existing of an almost innumerable series of languages and dialects of the American Continent. The greater part of Indian grammars and vocabularies exist only in MS., and were compiled chiefly by Missionaries of the Christian Church; and to Dr. Ludewig and Mr. Trübner, we are, therefore, the more indebted for the great care with which they have pointed out where such are to be found, as well as for enumerating those which have been printed, either in a separate shape, in collections, or in voyages and travels, and elsewhere."—Leader, 11th Sept. 1858.

"I have not time, nor is it my purpose, to go into a review of this admirable work, or to attempt to indicate the extent and value of its contents. It is, perhaps, enough to say, that apart from a concise but clear enumeration and notice of the various general philological works which treat with greater or less fulness of American languages, or which incidentally touch upon their bibliography, it contains not less than 256 closely-printed octavo pages of bibliographical notices of grammars, vocabularies, etc., of the aboriginal languages of America. It is a peculiar and valuable feature of the work that not only the titles of printed or published grammars or vocabularies are given, but also that unpublished or MS. works of these kinds are noticed in all cases where they are known to exist, but which have disappeared among the débris of the suppressed convents and religious establishments of Spanish America."—E. G. Squier, in a paper read before the American Ethnological Society, 12th Jan. 1858.

"In consequence of the death of the author before he had finished the revision of the work, it has been carefully examined by competent scholars, who have also made many valuable additions."—American Publishers' Circular, 30th Jan. 1858.

"It contains 256 closely-printed pages of titles of printed books and manuscripts, and notices of American aboriginal languages, and embraces references to nearly all that has been written or published respecting them, whether in special works or incidentally in books of travel, periodicals, or proceedings of learned societies."—New York Herald, 29th Jan. 1858.

"The manner in which this contribution to the bibliography of American languages has been executed, both by the author, Mr. Ludewig, and the able writers who have edited the work since his death, is spoken of in the highest terms by gentlemen most conversant with the subject."—American Historical Magazine, Vol. II, No. 5, May, 1858.

"Je terminerai en annonçant le premier volume d'une publication appelée à rendre de grands services à la philologie comparée et à la linguistique générale. Je veux parler de la Bibliotheca Glottica, ouvrage devant renfermer la liste de tous les dictionnaires et de toutes les grammairies des langues connues, tant imprimés que manuscrits. L'éditeur de cette précieuse bibliographie est M. Nicolas Trübner, dont le nom est honorablement connu dans le monde oriental. Le premier volume est consacré aux idiomes Américaines; le second doit traiter des langues de l'Inde. Le travail est fait avec le soin le plus conscient, et sera honneur à M. Nicolas Trübner, surtout s'il poursuit son œuvre avec le même ardeur qu'il mise à le commencer."—L. Leon de Rosny, Revue de l'Orient, Février, 1858.

"Mr. Trübner's most important work on the bibliography of the aboriginal languages of America is deserving of all praise, as eminently useful to those who study that branch of literature. The value, too, of the book, and of the pains which its compilation must have cost, will not be lessened by the consideration that it is first in this field of linguistic literature."—Petermann's Geographische Mittheilungen, p. 79, Feb. 1858.

"Undoubtedly this volume of Trübner's Bibliotheca Glottica ranks amongst the most valuable additions which of late years have enriched our bibliographical literature. To us Germans it is most gratifying that the initiative has been taken by a German bookseller himself, one of the most intelligent and active of our countrymen abroad, to produce a work which has higher aims than mere pecuniary profit, and that he, too, has laboured at its production with his own hands; because daily it is becoming a circumstance of rare occurrence that, as in this case, it is a bookseller's primary object to serve the cause of literature rather than to enrich himself."—P. Tromet, Borsenblatt, 4th Jan. 1858.

* "In the compilation of the work the editors have availed themselves not only of the labours of Vater, Barton, Duponceau, Gallatin, De Sonza, and others, but also of the MS. sources left by the missionaries, and of many books of which even the library of the British Museum is deficient, and furnish the fullest account of the literature of no less than 525 languages. The value of the work, so necessary to the study of ethnology, is greatly enhanced by the addition of a good Index."—Berliner National-Zeitung, 22nd Nov. 1857.

"The name of the author, to all those who are acquainted with his former works, and who know the thoroughness and profound character of his investigations, is a sufficient guarantee that this work will be one of standard authority, and one that will fully answer the demands of the present time."—Petzholt's Anzeiger, Jan. 1858.

"The chief merit of the editor and publisher is to have terminated the work carefully and lucidly in contents and form, and thus to have established a new and largely augmented edition of "Vater's Linguarum totius orbis Index", after Professor Jülg's revision of 1847. In order to continue and complete this work the editor requires the assistance of all those who are acquainted with this new branch of science, and we sincerely hope it may be accorded to him."—Magazin für die Literatur des Auslandes, No. 38, 1858.

"As the general title of the book indicates, it will be extended to the languages of the other Continents in case it meet with a favourable reception, which we most cordially wish it."—A. F. Pott, Preussische Jahrbücher, Vol. II, part 1.

"Cette compilation savante est sans contredit, le travail bibliographique le plus important que notre époque ait vu surgir sur les nations indigènes de l'Amérique."—Nouvelles Annales des Voyages. Avril, 1859.

"La Bibliotheca Glottica, dont M. Nicolas Trübner a commencé la publication, est un des livres les plus utiles qui aient jamais été rédigés pour faciliter l'étude de la philologie comparée. Le premier tome de cette grande bibliographie linguistique comprend la liste textuelle de toutes les grammaires, de tous les dictionnaires et des vocabulaires même les moins étendus qui ont été imprimés dans les différents dialectes des deux Amériques; en outre, il fait connaître les ouvrages manuscrits de la même nature renfermés dans les principales bibliothèques publiques et particulières. Ce travail a dû nécessiter de longues et patientes recherches; aussi mérite-t-il d'attirer tout particulièrement l'attention des philologues. Puisque les autres volumes de cette bibliothèque être rédigés avec le même soin et se trouver bientôt entre les mains de tous les savants auxquels ils peuvent rendre des services inappréciables."—Revue Américaine et Orientale, No. I, Oct. 1858.

"To every fresh addition to the bibliography of language, of which we have a most admirable specimen in this work, the thoughtful linguist will ever, as the great problem of the unity of human speech approaches towards its full solution, turn with increasing satisfaction and hope.

But M. Nicolas Trübner, however, has perhaps, on the whole, done the highest service of all to the philologer by the publication of "The Literature of American Aboriginal Languages". He has, with the aid of Professor Turner, greatly enlarged, and at the same time most skilfully edited, the valuable materials acquired by his deceased friend H. Ludewig. We do not indeed, at this moment, know any similar work deserving of full comparison with it. In its ample enumeration of important works of reference, and careful record of the most recent facts in the literature of its subject, it, as might have been expected, greatly surpasses Jülg's "Vater", valuable and trustworthy though that learned German's work undoubtedly is."—North British Review No. 59 (February 1859).

The Editor has also received most kind and encouraging letters respecting the work from Sir George Grey, the Chevalier Bunsen, Dr. Th. Goldstücker, Mr. Watts (of the Museum), Professor A. Fr. Pott (of Halle), Dr. Julius Petzholt (of Dresden), Hofrat Dr. Grasse (of Dresden), M. F. F. de la Figaniere (of Lisbon), E. Edwards (of Manchester), Dr. Max Müller (of Oxford), Dr. Buschmann (of Berlin), Dr. Jülg (of Cracow), and other linguistic scholars.
